CHURCH

RELIGION AND THE SCHOOL

(By REV. R. A. WILSON, First United Church)

Education Week this year is stressing freedom and one of the major freedoms is freedom of religion. For the sake of this freedom men have suffered persecution and death. Many of the first settlers on this continent came to its shores because they were promised freedom to worship God according to the direction of their own consciences. Today, however, to many people, freedom OF religion means freedom FROM religion. That, at least, is what freedom of religion means to our public educational system. Let us look briefly at some aspects of this curious situation.

In the first place, if you think it unimportant that religion has little place in public education, remember how great is the influence a teacher has with your children. If the teacher in Grade One makes a jack-o'-lantern without any teeth you may find that your efforts at home are completely unsatisfactory if you include teeth in your model. For a large part of the day during his most impressionable years the child is at school. A mysterious thing called the curriculum is making the intellectual weather in which his mind must grow. We all think the thing we are doing is important. The student assumes that the important subjects are the subjects he is studying, and, granted a good teacher and co-operation on the pupil's part, any subject can become interesting. But in all 12 years of elementary and high school there is one subject about which the teacher must maintain a discreet silence. That subject is Christianity. This silence isn't the teacher's fault, for the subject can't be taught in school. Don't blame the Department of Education for leaving the subject out for this omission is one of those collective sins in which most of us have some share.

When you stop to think of it it is a ridiculous situation in which we are involved. The Christian religion upholds a faith which it claims brings salvation to all who accept it. By any test it is important. Historically, it has done much to make us what we are, be that good or bad. Scientifically, religion is such a universal phenomena that its presence requires some explanation. It changes the landscape, dotting it with places of worship. Even economically (the crowning method of explanation for some) it seems to have importance, for people do spend a limited amount of money to maintain its institutions. And when at last life's silver cord is broken, with few exceptions the offices of religion are sought. Yet about this, the most fascinating of all subjects, the teacher must maintain a great silence. Oh, yes, occasionally it creeps into a history course and it is discovered that in some ancient and wicked day the men of the church, overcome by human weakness, started a war or did something else equally notorious. Or, if by chance some child, made of the stuff of the poets and philosophers, should ask one of life's important questions, such as "Why are we here?" the subject must be shifted to a less embarrassing topic such as the lift pump or the steam engine. The beauty of this system of silence is that it has an immortality all its own. By training students very highly in some subjects and keeping their curiosity dulled on this controversial question it will soon be possible to say that there is no one who could teach the subject. One thing our school system is best fitted to produce is teachers. One generation teaches the next. By this process our ignorance is self-perpetuating. Soon the public mind will be ignorant enough to accept one of the bloody secular religions that defy the state or man or some equally monstrous abstraction.

Roughly speaking, there are two groups who maintain this educational taboo. There are the religious people who refuse to look at any teaching except their own and there are those educators who regard religion as a burden to be cast aside. On the other hand there is a majority who would welcome a greater use of this rich treasure of human experience. Could not a course be designed in co-operation with the various churches that would help to inform the student about the history and institutions of Christianity? Its purpose need not be to persuade but to inform. The establishment of such a course would present difficulties but there are far greater dangers in our growing religious illiteracy. Religious freedom is not found in ignorance but in knowledge. Some way must be found whereby the resources of the schools can be used more effectively.

PRESBYTERIAN RELIEF PASTOR

Rev. A. M. McColl, recently retired from Westminster Presbyterian Church, Sioux City, Iowa, arrived in the city yesterday from Vancouver, where he is now making his home, to occupy the pulpit of First Presbyterian Church until a regular minister has been secured.

Mr. McColl is a veteran of the First Great War, having joined a Canadian Scottish Regiment as a private. Later, as chaplain, he served both in France and England and for sometime after returning to Canada. He was wounded in action while serving as a private in France. His son served as a paratrooper in the last conflict.
