.. About WORK AND PRICES

getting a new 1948 car.

Something like a kid that can't wait for Christmas, I been doing some asking about prices and found they're a lot higher than I figured. 30 I began to find out why.

factory are turning out only about two-thirds as many cars per eight-hour shift as they used to before the war. And that's in spite better machinery. The same story goes right around the circle of manufacturers.

Result is that all of us--workmen included-who want cars have to spend a lot more months of our work making the money to buy 'em.

The thought that comes to me is that if we figure we are getting prosperous by just having work and pay, we're kidding ourselves. We only get prosperous according to the amount of goods we turn out that we and others can buy at reasonable prices and consume
