They were notalways the same two families, but there never the worms are there first. was a third. It may have been that three women make a crowd even on the banks of the Re Deer River; or it could have been that the front sea of the democrat comfortably seated but two. There were no family limi number crowded in beside our own six, plus milk-cans, candy was no thought of inconvenience or crowding-not until 20 years later and then it was too late to

The dampness of the river me the party as it neared the long sloping ravine where it ran. Not many rods further the air became filled with the pungent scent of ripe cranberries. The boys in particular grinned impish anticipation of squirting the juice where it would do most damage. Everyone was expected to pick, and would, but there was ample time and opportunity for many other things as well. Both should be accomplished.

The home trip was different. There was less room because tion slid into any remaining much less hilarity and less talkin the back. Up front conversation was speeded up if anything, low in tone, and punctuated with sympathetic cluckings.

It was this part that left the hangover-that pensive, satisfied expression on my mother's face that had nothing to do with rows of newly filled jars. tI was mystifying until one of these "days after" when she remarked: "Hearing someone else's troubles make vour own so light."

Picking blueberries was different. Especially where confidences are concerned. In the wildest imagination it would not be possible for anyone to get comfortable enough to be that human

The last ones I picked were just off Wantage Road. Some people maintain that they aren't properly blueberries but blue huckleberries, tOhers swear they are none other than deluxe blueberries. And I agree. With one feot deep in muskeg, the other two-and-a-half feet away desperately clinching a log, one hand flailing flies and the other picking, I still agreed and felt comfortable by comparison with other blue-berry associations. The honors were definitely here and it hadn't all to do with flavor. Both kinds, the Alberta berry and these, are heavenly, just one of those things put here for "God's chillun." My only complaint lies in the places they

"People get so confidential in grow. Never, no never, are they grain of intestinal fortitude to glimpse, let alone pick. And then

In Alberta they grow where it is dry and hot and in a district inhabited by bears. Not the usual kind, but great big fellows who nclude blueberries on their menu, preferably out of a newly illed pail that somebody hid in tations, however. Any given a shady little nook to pick up later. tI was put there after hours of toil. Since the berries pails and one small tub. There hug the ground, pickers do to. So you limber up with a few symnastics, arm yourself with what is known as a "picker," don a very broad-brimmed hat, and go to work.

After the firs four hours it sn't so bad. There is a numbing influence at work. Besides, you have gleaned a few berries Quite a few, in fact, counting all the leaves the picker brings with those delicate clusters of blue. But you don't think of the leaves. Not yet. You wait until you are at home. Then you sit in the coolest spot in the house, dream of blueberry pie and preserves, blow and pick small leaves-and forget the immediate and miserable past.

"Worming" is so much simpler. each container was brimming A bit of salt in the water, and and standing separate. That up they come, dead and harmmeant that the younger genera- less. There are people who fear a few never make an appearance crevies. Therefore there was except dyed blue, and in the centre of a berry. Who could ever
