Scenes of Enthusiasm as British Airmen Sailed Away for Vancouver Last Evening

Rupert ! Prince Thanks for your welcome! See if we don't come back again!"

These were Squadron Leader MacLaren's words of farewell to the crowds who assembled las evening at the G.T.P. wharf see the British round-the-world flyers resume their journey south on H.M.C.S. Thiepval after having spent two days packed full of enthusiasm and welcome in this

The Thiepval sailed at 5.30 Hundreds of people visited the ship during the afternoon and inspected the wrecked airplane. By the time set for sailing, the dock was crowded and the send off was quite as enthusiastic as the welcome and entertainment during the stay of the airmen here.

As Squadron Leader MacLaren stepped out of the automobile which brought him to the wharf, he was besieged by owners of autograph books who sought to get his signature. Fragments of the wrecked plane were also offered for the same purpose and even a Japanese parasol which had been brought by the Thiepval from across the Pacific. The air commander took things in good part and was heard to inquire if there was anything left of his machine.
