Not Live Too Much In The Future.

The tendency in the west is for everyone to gamble on futures. Many people bought real estate in Prince Rupert years ago with the idea of becoming rich quickly, just as they did in many other cities, and today they find themselves still holding on but with a great deal of the fancied value gone. The difficulty in a small town is to forget the past. We refuse to bury our dead.

Again and again it has been made clear to us that we have to do business on the basis of the present rather than the future. We are all hopeful for the year that is opening before us and it is expected that important developments will make the city more prosperous, but to make our individual budgets based on those developments would be foolish. We must learn to cash in on our experiences or the experiences are not worth anything.

Economics Are Demanded Everywhere.

Economics are being demanded everywhere. Prince Rupert is not by any means alone in this regard. It is being generally realized that people must cut their coats according to the cloth they have and not try to make two coats out of material sufficient only for one. This realization is causing some heartburnings in every city. Men who in the past have been in the habit of playing fast and loose with public funds do not like to have to curtail. The proceeds of economizing is always unpleasant until we become used to it. There are times, however, when it is necessary and everywhere throughout the country that is being realized. Borrowing in order to liquidate our debts is bound to prove fatal in the end.

Elections Are Not At Present Demanded.

There is talk of elections both in this province and in connection with the Federal government. Neither are necessary or desirable at the present time so far as an outsider can see. In the provincial arena there are a few people with money getting their names into print and calling themselves the Provincial Party and they are shouting at the tops of their little voices for an immediate election. No one else is heard from and the government would be foolish to listen to these inspired capitalists or hirelings of capitalists. In the Dominion there are three parties, but two of them have similar aims and objects. These are the Liberals and the Progressives. The tendency is for them to get together and no election is needed in order to do that. They may easily unite politically when their aims are similar.

Elections are always expensive and they are bad for business. They make people excited and unsettled and tend to keep people from work and thus impoverish the country. A little more attention to individual duties and less desire on the part of individuals to pose before the public would benefit the whole country.

Labor Grows And Becomes Conservative.

The old days of labor exclusiveness is passing and with it goes the radicalism of the past. In Britain labor as a political entity is making immense strides. Since 1900 the number of members in the British parliament has been increased 21 times. In 1900 the labor party elected nine members and polled 118,003 votes. In 1923 it elected 192 members and polled 4,386,843 votes.

The party has gradually widened the scope of its appeal to the people and has gradually taken in people from all walks of life. As most of the people of the country work at something practically all, both men and women, are eligible for membership in the party. Even tilled people have joined and are helping to carry out the program of the party in a modified form.

Naturally the accession of this support from other than trade union ranks has had a modifying influence on the policy of the leaders who feel that they can only hope to succeed by continuing to receive that support. Labor leaders are also beginning to realize that things political are not always what they seem. Theories do not always work out in practice and experiments with the body politic are dangerous. Gradual changes are always to be preferred to sudden movements.

Urge Members of Rotary Club to Give Attention to Things
Other than the Gross Material

"Without literary expression Canada can never take the place she should have among the nations of the world," declared Douglas Durkin, the novelist, in concluding an address before the Rotary Club at their luncheon at the St. Regis Cafe yesterday afternoon. He mentioned in the course of his speech the rightful pride the people took in their material institutions and welfare but urged that there was more to a city and more to a nation than material life. What, for want of a better expression is spoken of as the spiritual life, the development of the deeper and more lasting things was what really constituted the greatness of a city or of a nation.

Mr. Durkin spoke appreciatively of the privilege of being able to speak with a man who had been the inspiration for Ralph Connor's Sky Pilot presiding. Since coming here he had had the pleasing experience of reviewing the history of the city as expressed in the pages of the files of the Daily News. He found that when the city was scarce two months old she had a newspaper to interpret the life of the city to the outside world. Before incorporation a corner lot had been sold at $17,500 and the purchaser considered it worth twice that sum the next day. Before the Kelly's Cut episode there had been a blast in which 25 tons of vitreous was exploded which moved 250,000,000 pounds of rock in one shot. He traced the development of the material and moral life of the city through the news columns of the paper to the point where the city had become as respectable and law abiding as any in the country. Some day this terminus of the great trans-continental line would not only show material progress but would appear in the art and literature of the country.

Railway Building

With a vein of humor, the speaker told how he had been partly responsible for Prince Rupert being here in that when employed at railway building he had helped complete a section of line between Dauphin and Prince Albert. Without that section Prince Rupert would not perhaps have been possible. He had worked on a survey gang, on the dump, had driven a team, and had helped to build bridges. In fact there was scarcely any part of railway construction in which he had not taken part. At that time he was at the end of steel.

The end of steel had gradually pushed its way west until today it ended at this city, a city of which they could well be proud.

Speaking of his experiences with natives in northern Australia he said they appeared to be of a better class than those of the south.

"The territory is full of surprises from the pastoral viewpoint," said Mr. Cook, "being well watered and substantially grassed and timbered. Free from droughts, the much maligned north country must soon come into its own."

MANY FRENCH COULD NOT READ OR WRITE

PARIS, Jan. 14.—France has been credited with the possession of an excellent system of education, but faith in it received a rude shock recently when the literacy statistics of two infantry regiments, recruited in 1923, were given out.

One-third of the young men gathered largely from the farming districts of the republic could neither read nor write. Many of the total of 700 did not know a treaty of peace had been signed after the war, and few could tell who made the laws for their country.
