While reasonable success has attended many of the hunting expeditions which have gone forth since the season for deer and birds opened, the weather so far has not been altogether favorable, it is said, but from now on the bags ought to be bigger. Deer, which were chased out of the lowlands soon after the season opened, are still high in the mountains and it will take a good snowfall to bring them down. While stormy weather is not considered a handicap to bird hunting, it has been at least too bad recently to be comfortable for the hunters and a spell of clear, frosty atmospheric conditions would be welcome all around. The best of the season is yet in store.

New York's baseball fans are very fickle. Like those of other cities they felt that too many pennant's were coming Gotham's way and all through this season it is said that 50 per cent of the city's fans were hoping the New York clubs would crack. Instead of rooting for the home team many of them applauded the efforts of the visiting team and, when Washington nosed the Yankees out in the American League, there was a general feeling of satisfaction. When the Giants, too, began to slip they suddenly realized, however, that this was more than they had bargained for. Thus there was a reversal of feeling and in the last stages of the National League and also in the world series the fans of New York were turning out again in great numbers rooting for McGraw's men to win their fourth pennant and bring the world's championship to the metropolis.
