Playing Politics In United States.

Despatches today tell of the stopping of William Jennings Bryan by the Sheriff and the search of his car where mineral waters were found. Apparently they play politics to the limit in that country. It would seem as if someone knew there were bottles in Bryan's car and informed of it. The sheriff was told about it and the result was a little more free advertising for the free silver and no booze Nebraska. If they could have caught the politician with a bottle of the real stuff aboard, they would have had something to talk about on the stump.

Gold Strike On Stikine River.

A second reference to a gold strike on the Stikine River is made today in despatches from Wrangell. Apparently there is likely to be a good deal of mining activity in the Stikine district of British Columbia and by next spring probably more will be known about the country from the mining viewpoint.

Why Not Exhibit From Alaska At Fair.

Now that the Alaska people have commenced coming to the fair why not try to secure an exhibit from Alaska for the fair next year. If they were represented in the mining, the agricultural or any other sections it would be worth while. There is no good reason why the entente which has commenced so well should not be extended and each town take part in the activities of the others—irrespective of national boundary lines.

Lighter Than Air Machines Not Yet.

Lighter than air machines have not so far proved much of a success in connection with the progress of aviation. The airplane has far outstripped the other type just as the gas automobile has superseded the electric. What the future will show no one can well prophesy but it seems likely that the heavier than air types will prevail as being easier to handle, less expensive and safer than the other.

Vancouver Holds Up Government.

It looks as if Vancouver was holding up the government in the matter of the Capilano timber reserves. The minister of lands, according to press reports, proposed to sell on behalf of the government a small parcel of timber land in the reserve. To this objection was taken by three Vancouver members including Charles Woodward, senior member for that city, who has handed in his resignation but may yet withdraw it.

The Vancouver members know that the government cannot get on without their support and that if they lost it they must resign. The result is that they are placing a gun at the head of the premier.

The present Vancouver situation is one of the weak points in the democratic system of government, as we have it in this country. If the government has but a small majority, any small section of that majority is in a position to hold up the government for special favors. It has been done in the past and will be done again as long as the present system is in force.

MANY TURNED OUT TO FAREWELL ANYOX PEOPLE LAST NIGHT

Members of the Fair Board, the football association, the Carnival Queen party and friends generally turned out last night to farewell the Anyox football team and Miss Gladys Dodd, the maid-of-honor from the smelter town when they sailed on the Gardena last night on their return north. The local people rode on the vessel to the Cold Storage wharf where a dance was held while the steamer was discharging freight. Piper Dewar of Anyox furnished the music.

TALE OF THE SEA AT WESTHOLME THEATRE

Picture Shows Storm and Lightship, and Tells Wonderful Story

The story "Code of the Sea" is an original for the screen by Byron Morgan, author of many of Wally Reid's automobile successes. Bertram Millhauser made the adaptation.

In the picture, La Roecque has the role of Bruce McDow, first mate on the lightship Barrier Reef. One night a great storm comes up, and the yacht Neroid, on which is Jenny Hayden, McDow's sweetheart, goes on the rocks and is breaking up fast. At the same time the passenger steamer Northern, Capt. Hayden, is trying to make port with three hundred passengers. A wireless message from the steamer orders McDow to remain at his station so the Northern can clear the reef in safety.

The lightship springs one of her forward chains, but McDow orders his men to ride it out until they break loose. He put out to the Neroid in a small boat, picking up a lifeline, which has been shot out from a shore station and fallen short. He just about makes the Neroid in time—sees all on board taken safely ashore in the breeches buoy—for the frail craft disappears beneath the waves with the captain and himself aboard. Is that the end of him?

LURE OF TROPICS IN THUNDERING DAWN

Unending Series of Thrills in Story Shown Here at the Week End

An unending series of thrilling situations gripped the life of Jack Standish, virile young Yankee fugitive from society in a remote Javanese port. Strong drink and fascinating tropical women swiftly made an outcast of him.

The fiancée he had left behind sensed his danger and hurried to him with her love, only to discover that another woman, a creature of the Javanese cabarets has claimed him in mad infatuation.

With heroic self sacrifice she pitted her heart against the wiles of the tropics. Risking all, even her honor, in a struggle to win her mate back to sanity and civilization, she daily saw him succumbing more and more to the languid lure of the lotus eaters.

Then came the wrath of the typhoon—the demoniacal wind storm that breathes destruction through the tropics. Trees, houses, people, whole villages were caught in its vortex. And with the typhoon came the most dreaded of all nature's catastrophes—the tidal waves.

In the mad rush of swirling waters, the whole earth seemed to be doomed. In its midst, a man feebly struggled for breath and safety, and a slim girl struggled too, for the life of a wastrel hardly worth the saving. In this cataclysm of human emotions and elemental fury is enacted the most dramatic scene of adventurous love ever shown on the screen. It is the climax of "Thundering Dawn," showing here at the week end.

LARGE ATTENDANCE AT NATIVE BURIAL

Mrs. Emily Deelgren, Who Died at Inverness on September 12, Was Interred Here

There was a very large attendance of Massett Indians at the funeral of the late Mrs. Emily Deelgren which took place on Saturday morning at 11 o'clock from the B.C. Undertakers' Parlors to Fairview Cemetery. Rev. W. F. Rushbrook officiated with Alfred Adams assisting.

Deceased, who was the wife of Gunner Deelgren and who died at Inverness on September 12 was a well known resident of Massett.

Among others there were flowers from the staff of the Inverness Cannery and Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Johnston.

OAK BAY LOTS WERE NOT IN DEMAND AT RECENT TAX SALE

VICTORIA, Sept. 15.—Out of 98 parcels of land offered for sale in the Oak Bay municipality only five lots were sold at the recent tax sale but the clerk reports several more are likely to be sold. To accommodate these an adjournment of the sale was taken.

Much of the land offered for sale was on good streets with sewer and water.

FASHIONS & FOIBLES by Shirley Sharon

Since the advent of the motor and the movies, there are no longer any plain country women and even gingham dresses are cut on smart lines.

WHAT might be called a sublimated gingham dress has a smart version of the new side closing and a sleeve that might be considered modest whichever way you take it. The frock is cut on the straight, slim lines of the present silhouette. Dresses of this type are worn fairly short and most women prefer the short sleeve for it is cool, comfortable and takes very little material. For out of town these dresses are made of gingham, chambray, soft linen or linen-finished cottons. Pongee is very nice for the city.

ONE thing about being rich, you do not hate rich people.

SOME day, I suppose our posterity, if we have any, will look back and talk of the good old times, meaning 1924.

THERE'S one thing about the modern girl. She does not giggle all the time. She is likelier to look you in the eye and remark: "Cut the rough stuff or you get the gate."

IT is said that no girl should teach school more than three years in one town. If she can't get a husband in that time it is better to try the next.

ONE of the signs of the times is that Prince Rupert people are beginning to come back. That's where they differ from Carpentier.

THE fair is over and we are still alive. Thank heaven!

SHEIKS DIRTY AND NOT PROUD

Norma Talmadge Tells of Experiences Among Them When Travelling in Algeria

SCRAMBLED FOR MONEY

Before starting work in "The Song of Love," Norma Talmadge says it struck her that it would be a very good thing to see some of the places where the action of the story took place, and it also occurred to her that it would be a very good thing to look at the original Garden of Allah. She says:

"It was a wonderful trip—strange, colorful and never to be forgotten.

We had already been on a motor trip through Germany and France, and we were all pretty tired out, so my mother and my sister Constance struck when we got to the Sahara. They couldn't seem to hear the call of the desert. Therefore I went on alone out over the famous world-old caravan routes with my husband and John Considine.

We went first to Algiers, which is interesting but pretty well tourist-ridden. From there we took a funny, jerky, smelly French government train to Constantine. Then we motored south to Batna and then to Biskra. Near Biskra are the marvellous gardens now known to everyone as the Garden of Allah. It is a marvellously beautiful place.

At Biskra, my husband took me into a native dance hall, where we saw the first of the sheiks.

The Dancing Girls

It was very queer and rather creepy. There was a sort of vaudiville show with dancing girls who appeared on a little platform while the audience sat squatted around on the floor smoking hookas and drinking thick sweetish Turkish coffee. It was just like the scenes that Robert Hichens describes. The tobacco smoke was so thick you could cut it with a knife and the place smelled as though a Chinese family had just moved out.

The Arabian hours, I shall have to confess, were not up to the advertising. In fact, most of them were not Arabian anyway. The majority of the dancing girls were either Spanish or Jewish and were the only unveiled women that we saw.

One or two of them were really lovely, but the rest wouldn't get very far in a movie test.

Bored and Languid

The dancing was nothing like the wild, hectic Arabian dancing that I had heard about. In fact, you could hardly call it dancing at all. All the girls did was to get up before the audience one at a time and wave their scarfs or handkerchiefs around, in a lazy, bored way. Once in a while they shook their shoulders and made a few gestures with their arms. To tell the truth they looked bored to death. In this regard they had nothing on the audience.

The real sheik doesn't appear to be an animated character. While the girls were dancing the men hardly looked at them, but sat around like lumps of lead, only their black piercing eyes showing any signs of human animation. Most of them were dirty and unattractive. There was only one Valentino among them. He was really gorgeous but disdainful.

Scrambled For Money. The only time that the place roused to anything approximating life was when my husband tactfully deposited some good American coins as a little tribute of our appreciation. The proud sheiks of the desert did not disdain to take part in the wild scramble. Even the Valentino one unbent and joined the scramble.

The next day we saw most of the same dancing girls squatted out in front of their little houses in the narrow, ancient streets. It suggested the notorious Yoshiwara of Japan, and I felt that the chaste damsels of the desert were in need of some kind of an Algerian Will flays to watch over their morals.
