ROWBOAT UPSETS

EDMONTON, July 25 .- While boating with another girl on Shoal Lake, about sixty miles northwest of Edmonton, Miss Inglik Nelson, sixteen years of age, was drowned, when the rowboat filled with water and sank. Her friend, Miss Alaburd, was rescued by people on the shore. The two girles were only about thirty yards from the shore when their boat collapsed, and every effort was made to save them. Miss Nelson's body was recovered by a search party later in the evening.

Gandhi Wonderful Figure in Life of Hindoo People

In accordance with the custom of his people Gandhi was married at the early age of twelve, says Romain Holland, the French author, who has written a book about his life. When he was 19 his parents sent him to London to study at the London University-his mother not consenting to let him go till she had bound him by a threefold vow, of abstince from meat and from wine, and of complete chastity. Here for three years he gave himself up to a life of strict discipline and severe work.

It is interesting to know that Gandhi is a lover of Plato, that he has translated Ruskin, that he admires Mazzini, and that Thoreau, speaking from the green fastnesses of Walden Pond, found a ready listener in him. Strangely enough it was while in London that he first came upon the Bhagavad Gita, and it was to him the fountain of living waters for which his thirsty soul had been crying out

Gandhi's faith is the keynote of his whole being, he is a man on fire with God, on fire with love. A Hindoo of the Hindoos, the truth has come to him through the channels of his own religion, but he knows nothing of exclusivism.

And again, "All religions are! different parts leading to the same goal." It was in the New! Testament, he says, that first hell found that ideal of long-suffering and of meek endurance to which has been given his lifelong allegiance, the ideal which leads, though maybe through death, most surely at last to Victory. "Christianity is part of my theology. Christ was a resiplendent revelation of God" is his testimony.

Even in the blouses of two-piece frocks the belt is as silent as it is in other styles that follow the present narrow tube lines.

THE two-piece frock with a straight skirt scarcely widened by its groups of plaits makes an extremely useful Summer costume for the young girl. The skirt is mounted on a long body lining so that it can also be worn with other slip-on blouses or sweaters. The blouse is frequently in contrast anyway in the models one sees in the smart Fifth Avenue shops -a skirt of white flannel, for instance, will be shown with the blouse in scarlet. powder-blue or almond-green flannel; or the skirt will be of tan wool jersey and the sleeveless blouse of brown jersey with a tan collar.
