BLACKWOOD on Bridge

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

First Bid Has Definite Psychological Advantage

When you have an advanced partial, you need your full complement of high cards to open the bidding, but you don't worry about your rebid.

When the opponents have the partial, you worry more about your rebid and less about your high cards.

Let's figure it this way. The opponents have a 60 partial and you deal. Is your hand aggressive enough to contest the bidding if they open? If it is, it is usually better to stretch a point as regards your high card holding and open the bidding yourself. Start contesting before the enemy has the opportunity to exchange a lot of information.

In the first place there is a psychological advantage in being the first to bid. The opponents are immediately and automatically on the defensive.

Unless they have a very decided edge in high cards, they are bound to find it somewhat more difficult to find their best spot. And they won't feel quite so free to double you at a low bidding level.

In today's hand Mr. Masters figured he would be willing to overcall in spades if the opponents opened the bidding, so why not get right in there at the start. He ended up at four spades and instead of being a sacrifice, the bid was made by a good play.

Luckily, Miss Brash elected to open a heart, which Mr. Abel won with the queen. Mr. Masters ruffed the heart return and laid down the ace of spades, getting the bad news that he had two trump losers.

But there was still a chance. He led to the king of club and returned the ten. Mr. Abel's queen was trapped and on the fourth club lead, the last heart was discarded from dummy.

Mr. Abel knew he was fixed if he overruffed, so he discarded a heart. Mr. Masters then led a trump and Mr. Abel was fixed anyway. After winning two trump tricks he had no good return.

A diamond would be right into dummy's ace-queen. On the actual heart lead, Mr. Masters ruffed on the board and discarded his losing diamond.
