BLACKWOOD on Bridge

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Shade High Card Needs, Be First To Open Bidding

In a situation where the opponents have an advanced part score I have recommended shading the usually high card requirements and opening the bidding ahead of them.

By acting so you have an immediate psychological advantage plus the opportunity of probing for a possible sacrifice spot at the very lowest bidding level.

But, as in the case in every bidding situation, you can carry a good thing too far. Remember, I recommended "shading" the high card requirements, not going berserk and bidding on practically nothing.

The holding of two pretty good five card suits gives your hand playability and helps to justify lowering the usual standards a little. Or a fair six card suit with good intermediates adds reason to your opening.

Put it this way: the less you have in high cards, the more you should have in distributional values and suit solidity.

Because her opponents had a 60 partial, Miss Brash opened the South hand with one spade. A bad decision. She was not only short in high cards, but short in playing tricks.

After Mr. Muzzy's doubtful raise, Mrs. Keen doubled and Mr. Dale left it in. Miss Brash went down four—700 points.

Note particularly Mr. Dale's decision to leave the double in for penalties. He knew his partner to be a sound bidder and she must have a fine hand to force him to bid at the three level.

He was certain that his side could easily fill out their game, either at a contract of three clubs or at two no trump or even at three-odd in one of the red suits if Mrs. Keen saw fit to bid one of them.

But the old master figured it this way. He was sure he could beat two spades. How badly he didn't know, but that wasn't too important.

He would get whatever penalty was available and after the hand he would still have a good partner and he would still be playing against Miss Brash, a rank overbidder, and Mr. Muzzy who is just rank, period. Why not prolong a rubber like this as much as possible?

Why not, indeed?

Warns of Dangers In Bacterial War

REGINA (CP)—Dr. E. E. Carlson of the health of animals branch of the federal agriculture department has predicted that bacteriological sabotage of livestock is an almost certain threat in the event of war.

Dr. Carlson told a Saskatchewan civil defence school here that saboteurs can contaminate stockyards, feed-company elevators, hatcheries, pharmaceutical factories and other sources with a number of diseases.

Foot-and-mouth disease would be only one of the menaces that might be faced, he said. Among other livestock killers which could be equally dangerous he listed rinderpest, brucellosis, anthrax, blackleg, tuberculosis, hog cholera, fowl plague and Newcastle disease, and infectious hog paralysis.

Canadian Soldiers Get Prison

WITH CANADIANS, Korea (CP)—A Canadian court-martial has sentenced Pte. Kenneth Carleton of Saint John, N.B., to one year detention for improperly discharging a weapon near a house in the village of Shin Sanry and for theft of a bottle of whisky.

Carleton was originally charged with murdering an elderly Korean woman but charges were reduced following a manslaughter conviction. Pte. Clarence Leo Mowrs of Sillery, Que., in same case, was sentenced to three years imprisonment.

GUILTY BUT INNOCENT

VANCOUVER (CP) — Police picked up two culprits after John Smedman complained that two men tried to hell him narcotics. The culprits explained they were stone broke and hoped to make $5 by peddling a capsule of asthma remedy as dope. They promised to make no more attempts at dope-pushing, fake or otherwise.

TISDALE, Sask. (CP)—An unprecedented building boom has come to this northeastern Saskatchewan town this summer. Value of construction is expected to exceed $250,000.
