MILLERD CANNERY HAD BUSY SUNDAY

One Hundred Cases of Clams Put Up Yesterday Employing Thirty People

The first real day's work was put in at the Millerd cannery near Seal Cove yesterday stated W. J. Jefferson, the manager, this morning. The plant was busy from 7 in the morning until 10 at night and put up 100 cases of clams with about thirty people working, including some women. The organization for the taking of the clams is now in operation and this week it is expected will see operations in full swing as far as the winter clam canning business is concerned. Both Indians and whites are engaged in getting the clams with the most so far coming in from Dundas Island.

DAUGHTERS OF ENGLAND BAZAAR SUCCESSFUL

Many Ladies Patronized Affair in McIntyre Block Saturday Afternoon—Winners of Raffles

The annual bazaar held by the Daughters of England Saturday afternoon in the McIntyre Block proved a very successful affair, the weather being most auspicious for the occasion. Many ladies called in the course of the afternoon and the serving of tea and supper proved very popular. Mrs. S. V. Cox and Mrs. J. Howe were general-conveners and those in charge of the various tables were: Raffles and novelties—Mrs. Walter Shaw and Mrs. Whatman. Plain and fancy sewing—Mrs. D. Wilton. Home cooking—Mrs. Goodsal and Mrs. Yates. Candy—Mrs. McLean and Mrs. Piper. Tea and supper tables—Mrs. George Leek. Cashier—Mrs. W. G. Oakley. Results of Raffles: The raffles resulted as follows: Half a ton of coal, won by Florence Smith. Biscuit jar, won by Mrs. Walter Shaw. Sweater, won by Mrs. John Manson. Centrepiece, won by Mrs. Christiansen. Slippers won by Mrs. S. Reith. Basket, won by Mrs. W. H. Vickers. Jewel case, won by Mrs. J. Manson. Doll, won by Mrs. J. Howe.

MAGISTRATE FINED SELF FOR CUTTING CORNER WITH AUTO

Car Was Driven by Member of His Family But he Being the Owner, Was Responsible

HAMILTON, Ont., Nov. 3.—Because a member of his family cut a corner too closely when driving his car, Police Magistrate George Frederick Jelfs was forced to fine himself five dollars, the usual fee for the offence, in the police court here. The name was called in court in the ordinary way, the charge read and sentence passed without any formality except that after the incident a short explanation was made.

PICTURES OF ORIENT DISPLAYED IN CHURCH

Full Congregation Attracted by Special Feature at Methodist Church Last Evening

There was a full congregation at the Methodist Church last night when the service took the form of an exhibition of lantern pictures taken by Rev. Frank Langford of Toronto, head of the Sunday School department of the Methodist Church, on his recent trip to the world's Sunday School convention in Japan. Depicting all phases of life in Japan, Korea and China and showing the countries agriculturally, industrially, architecturally and from a scenic standpoint, the pictures specialized on the mission work being carried out by the church in the Orient. The pictures will be shown again tonight at the Baptist Church Corner Club.

VICTORIA MAGISTRATE HEARD EVIDENCE IN THE CHINOOK JARGON

VICTORIA, Nov. 3.—The Chinook jargon was very much in evidence the other day here in the police court. Two Indians, James Albert and Mary Marshall were charged with being drunk, but in spite of their English names they professed not to be able to converse in English. Magistrate Jay at once began to question them in Chinook, and ended by assessing them ten dollars each. They paid.

DRUG ADDICT AT VANCOUVER DIES AGED 35

Tried to Give up Number of Times But Was Unable to Break Shackles

Christian burial was accorded a few days ago in Vancouver to the drug-ravaged remains of a once beautiful woman whose life and death constitute a mute appeal for pity and a tremendous indictment of the drug traffic, says Noel Robinson in the Vancouver Star. The circumstances surrounding the death and burial of Paula McCabe, former wife of a United States senator, and one of the best known denizens of Vancouver's underworld, are unfortunately similar to those which surround the end of many other addicts. Only 35 years of age, blonde, and once very prepossessing, she possessed until near the end an attractive personality and ability which, had she never given way to drugs, in all probability would have ensured her a happy and accomplished life and a very different end. Time and again she tried, with the help of others, to give up the terrible habit which had made her a woman of the streets, but after each attempt she succumbed to the temptation. The Native Daughters of Vancouver took a special interest in her case, and more than once she was, apparently, completely cured. Strange as it may seem to those unacquainted with the underworld, she was, even when she had sunk to the lowest depths, possessed of some of the finer qualities which must have marked her in her youth. For instance she would never give drugs to young boys or girls. Knowing through what hell she had passed herself, she was determined that they, at least, should not start on a similar path through her instrumentality. Several times during her periods of partial recovery from the hold which the habit had upon her, she attended meetings of those who were endeavoring to aid her and those in similar plight and exhibited her arms and legs to show the innumerable marks which the needle had left upon her, in order that these girls might realize the havoc which the habit had wrought. Only those who knew her well were aware of the effort which, despite her loss of self-respect, these exhibitions caused her. Husband Was Loyal A rather singular feature of her case was that, unlike many women of the underworld, who use large quantities of dope and earn the money to pay for it on the streets, she was not forced to do this, because her husband, a logger up the coast, whose attachment for her throughout is one of the redeeming features of the case, provided it for her. He himself has taken to drugs more than once, but is making a big fight to overcome the habit. Once well dressed, she went into a drug store in the West End and asked if she might go into an inner room where she knew the drugs and needles were kept, in order that she might fix up her clothes. She sized up the situation and shortly afterwards that store was robbed of drugs and needles. She did the same thing in a Shaughnessy drug store. Ultimately the place she lived in in South Vancouver was raided and a collection of empty drug bottles was found. She had, as she often did, divided up the spoils with other drug addicts, for she was very generous and popular with other unfortunates. She was an accomplished pianist and could speak several languages fluently. Most Pathetic Feature Her popularity was pathetically apparent when, at the last scene of all, she lay in the plain coffin in the quiet, undisturbed parlors whither her remains had been conveyed from the General Hospital where she passed away a week ago. Three well known Vancouver women who are deeply interested in the drug question, Mrs. J. Z. Hall, Mrs. E. H. Tomer and Mrs. James O'Brien were among the mourners. As they sat there, many of the underworld, including several negroes, entered in ones and twos to pay a last tribute to the memory of their friend. The most pathetic feature of that last scene was the presence of the dead woman's daughter, a beautiful girl of 18, who had travelled from the United States for the funeral. The object of making public this, one of many stories which could be told of the Vancouver underworld, is to arouse again the public to this the most terrible evil. George Russell, foreman of the Prince Rupert Daily News typographical department, who has been taking a holiday in the Old Country, writes to say he expects to be here about the middle of December.
