FLIERS LIKELY TO MAKE FLIGHT HERE WITHOUT LANDING

Longest Hop Will be Across Behring Strait from Attu to Paramushira

SEATTLE, April 2.—"We expect to make the flight from here to Prince Rupert without landing enroute unless the weather is bad or something happens to one of the machines," said Major Martin, in discussing the flight on which he expects to start tomorrow morning. One reason for the delay has been the bad weather here which prevented getting the pontoons adjusted and then one was found to be leaking.

"You bet, we'll make it in one hop," he said, confidently. "It's a long jump but nothing like the one from the Island of Attu to Paramushira."

The flyers are looking ahead to that jump from Attu, the longest of their flight, 860 miles, with the same feeling of assurance as their chief.

"That's where we leave this side of the world and alight on the other," Martin said.

From Aleutians

"Attu is the end of the Aleutian archipelago, and Paramushira is one of the islands of the Kuriles group, but not the first one we'll cross over. The first is Shomshu, too barren and bleak to permit a landing. For ten hours after we leave Attu we'll be out of sight of land.

"A lot of things can happen in that time, especially if the Pacific doesn't happen to be pacific. If we're forced down, it's just between us and God whether we're ever heard of again.

"But we don't care," he said. "It's worth the risk, isn't it? And it's all in the day's work."

Japan to Co-operate

It is understood the United States Asiatic fleet will have sent destroyers to protect the flyers across Behring Strait, and that the Japanese will have two war ships awaiting them on the other side.

"This won't help us navigate," said Martin, "but it's a great source of comfort to know, when you're up there in the air, that if you're forced down there's some chance of being picked up."

While crossing the gap between Attu and Paramushira the aviators will use smoke bonds to give them the direction and velocity of the wind, and will depend on their earth inductor compass to give them their course. But everything depends upon the weather, and this they realize.

Tom Collier, charged with driving a motor car while under the influence of liquor, pleaded guilty in the police court this morning. He was given seven days in jail without the option and his license was ordered cancelled. After having driven his car partly over the street, he was arrested at 9 o'clock last night by Sergeant McGlinchy at the corner of Eighth Avenue and Fulton Street.
