FASHIONS & FOIBLES

by Shirley Sharon

However hazy her knowledge of French verbs, the young girl is well versed on French fashions, even to the point of recognizing the smart ornament for her draped dress.

"It is complete!" exclaims Worth when he fastens an exquisite ornament at one side to hold a drapery there; and one could search through many shops without finding the exact duplicate of such an ornament. They are very easily and inexpensively made, however, and give the draped frock the same individual look as an expensive imported frock. Black satin crêpe is a smart material to use for this type of draped dress, either for the entire dress or with beige or white to line the capette and to face the drapery. A very smart young person wore this identical dress made of a lovely printed crêpe de Chine with navy and strawberry on a pale-gray ground.
