At some famous London aucion rooms was sold the other day a copy of a 17th century act of he time of Oliver Gromwell, Lord. Protector, "for the better avoiding and preventing annoyances in the City of London." This Act rovides that "No man shall afer the hour of nine at night ause any sudden outcry to be nade in the still of the night, as making any affray, or beating Phones Black 136 and Red 442. is wife, or servant, or singing, inder penalty of 3s. 4d." Preumably there was no objection o wife-beating before the hour of 9 p.m. and it did not matter low much one inconvenienced one's wife, so long as one did not listurb the neighbors.
