Students from Displaced Persons Camps Rank Tops in Classes Here; Learn English Quickly

TORONTO (CP)—Three students in Toronto, all from displaced persons camps in Europe and all unable to speak English three years ago, compiled fine records in upper-school examinations here.

The teen-agers, two girls and a boy, achieved marks that were all the more impressive because English is the only compulsory subject in the Ontario grade 13 curriculum.

Taisa Turkevich, 17, was born in Poland and left there four years ago, living in a displaced persons camp in Austria before coming to Canada. She could speak French, Polish, Ukrainian, Russian and German, but had to start learning English in an Edmonton public school, later studying higher grades.

NINE "FIRSTS"

After moving to Toronto, Taisa went straight into grade 13 and she gained nine firsts in the nine departmental subjects she took in June. She plans to enter a chemistry course in the University of Toronto. Maija Svanks, 18, was born in Latvia and with her family went to Germany when the Russians moved in. After five years in Germany she came to Toronto from a displaced persons camp in Oldenburg. By learning 100 words every day for a week, Maija taught herself basic English and went on from there. "English grammar is easy," says Maija, "but you have too many words. I am buried in vocabulary." Her aim is to be a statistician and she aims at a mathematics course at University of Toronto.

The third student is George Anyas, 18, who also came from a displaced persons camp in Germany and started studying English three years ago. Like Taisa, he gained nine firsts. He would like to become an engineer.

Royal Miniatures Painted by Woman

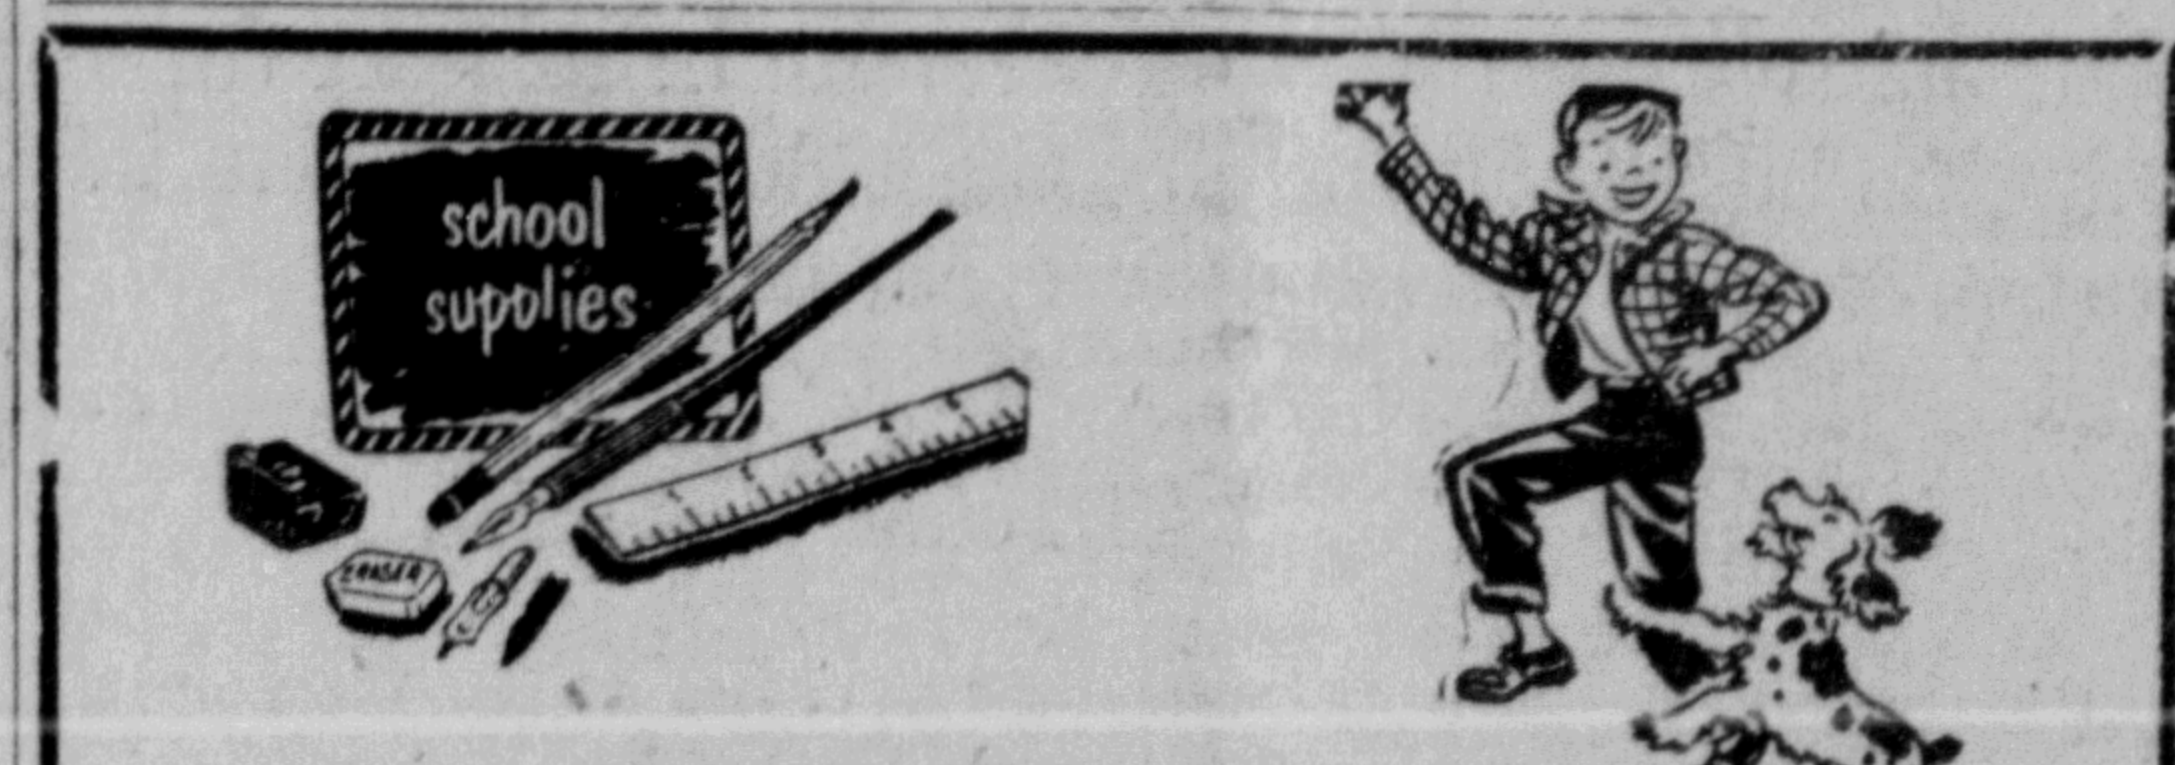

LONDON (AP)—Princess Anne, who has just celebrated her second birthday anniversary, has been meeting a new friend this summer. She is Mrs. Stella Marks, Australian-born artist who painted a miniature of the infant Princess which entailed regular visits to Buckingham Palace to study her subject.

Princess Anne, being like any other little girl of her age, did not actually sit for her portrait. She chatted and played while Mrs. Marks watched to capture her expression on the ivory which she paints in watercolors.

Mrs. Marks painted Prince Charles in the same fashion last year, making eight visits to Clarence House before she was finished. She has also painted miniatures of Queen Elizabeth II and the Duke of Edinburgh. An alert artist in her early 50s, Mrs. Marks began painting at the age of 10 and spent 20 years in the United States before coming to Britain.

NECTAR GRAPEFRUIT DRINK

A refreshing delicious drink is what makes a torrid summer day bearable. For such a day, we recommend "Nectar Grapefruit Drink." All it takes is three ingredients, and be sure to serve the mixture very, very cold. Keep some whole fruit nectar in your refrigerator throughout the summer; it will come in handy for countless excellent beverages. 2 cups apricot whole fruit nectar

1 cup grapefruit juice
1 teaspoon lemon juice
Blend fruit juices, chill thoroughly and serve. Makes six small glasses.
