Death Of Archbishop Loss To The World.

The death of Archbishop Du Vernet was a disfinct loss to the world. He was a great man, outstanding in the Church and pre-eminent as an advanced thinker, theologian and philosopher. His tenets were as broad as the world. A man of sympathetic understanding, he stood out clear above his fellows and yet was always one of them. In that lay his greatness.

Those who knew the Archbishop well and realized how humble he was sometimes find it difficult to realize that he was a national figure. Yet as they cast their minds back they will realize that he was far above the ordinary, that his thoughts were national in their scope and often of world importance.

Hobby Is What He Will Be Known From.

Like many other great men he had a hobby and it is from that he will be best known in years to come. He was a psychologist of note and in the course of his studies he became interested in thought transference or mental communication. His experiments with the chevreul pendulum are well known but what is not as well known is that his great aim in connection with it was to prove to the world and especially to sceptics that mind was the greatest power in the world and that if the mind of man could permeate space and influence hundreds how reasonable was it to suppose that the mind of God should control the world.

Believed In Laws Controlling Everything.

An article written about the work of the Archbishop in connection with his psychological work was submitted to him for correction in order that there might be no mistake as to his real aims and objects. At the end of the article he wrote with his own hands these rather remarkable words:

"He holds strongly that the spirit of God works through the human mind in accordance with psychological laws, not otherwise."

The Archbishop felt that the knowledge that mind acted on mind would be a wonderful influence for good. People would hesitate to think evil thoughts if they were assured that those evil thoughts were having an evil influence on all around them and especially on those they loved.

Was An Admirer Of Henri Bergson.

The Archbishop was an admirer of Henri Bergson who in his book on "Mind Energy" says: "If telepathy be a real fact, it is capable of being repeated indefinitely. I go further: if telepathy be real, it is possible that it is operating at every moment and everywhere, but with too little intensity to be noticed, or else in such a way that a cerebral mechanism stops the effect for our benefit at the very moment it is about to clear the threshold of consciousness. We produce energy at every moment, the atmosphere is continually electrified and we move among magnetic currents yet for thousands of years millions of human beings lived who never suspected the existence of electricity. We might very well have gone on without perceiving it, and it may be that this is now our case with telepathy."

Archbishop Du Vernet proved what Bergson suspected. He has started a search into the realms of mind which will be carried on and in which he himself may yet take part.

WANTED -- A TRADE REVIVAL

The steady growth of British Columbia has depended in the past and will depend in the future upon the fair progress of its premier industry.

Every thinking citizen of the Province should realize to what an extent the destiny of British Columbia is entwined with that of its forest industries.

As an instance—the taxes that the lumbermen of British Columbia paid into the public treasury in 1923 more than settled our total education bill (including the grant to the University) and in addition covered the whole amount appropriated for the maintenance of the public works of the Province.

The British Columbia forest industries may be capable of beating this unique record in the furtherance of the prosperity of the Province but an increase of taxation must be based upon a more solid output—upon a free expansion of activities, upon larger markets, and more stabilized values.

An unembarrassed lumber industry is the key to British Columbia's prosperity. The uncertainty now existing regarding the unamended Timber Royalty Act of 1914 is without doubt the main cause of the existent depression not only in the lumber industry but in the many groups dependent upon its vast purchasing power.

A settlement of this vexed question satisfactory both to the industry and to the public should bring about the trade revival that British Columbia is so anxiously awaiting.

This series of articles communicated by the Timber Industries Council of British Columbia.

FORMER LOCAL GIRL MARRIED IN SOUTH

Miss Mary Hancq Becomes Bride of Roy Henry Pollock at Glenwood

Many friends in this city of the bride, who with her parents lived here until recently and was employed in W. W. Wrathall's stationary store, will be interested in the following from the Vancouver Province:

A pretty ceremony took place on October 15 at the home of the brides' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Emil Hancq, Fern Ridge, when their elder daughter, Mary Madeline, became the bride of Roy Henry Pollock of Glenwood. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was gowned in white satin with overdress of silver radium lace. Her veil of net was arranged in Juliette fashion and held in place with orange blossoms. She carried white carnations and lily of the valley. Miss Frances Hancq was bridesmaid and wore a frock of king blue Canton and silver lace and a coronet of rhinestones in her hair. Her bouquet was of bronze chrysanthemums. Mrs. C. T. Heward, as matron of honor, was in dove grey satin romaine with black picture hat and she carried pink carnations. The groom was supported by Dennis Vaughan.

The wedding service, which took place under an archway of autumn leaves and flowers, was read by Rev. Mr. Peacock. The wedding music was played by Mrs. Victor Vaughan, and during the signing of the register Miss Dorothy Vaughan sang "Love's Coronation."

Following the ceremony a reception was held, and later Mr. and Mrs. Pollock left on a motor tour to Seattle and other southern points. The bride travelled in a dress of king blue Canton with fawn wrap and hat. On their return they will reside at Glenwood.
