MOSCOW AGAIN WEARS MORE FORMAL DRESS

Silk Hats Not in General Favor, But Changes Taking Place

MOSCOW, April 23. -British, Italian and Norwegian recognition has put Moscow back into the top hat market.

Bolshevik diplomats who, prior to the Genoa conference, were content to wear soft shirts and trousers baggy at the knees, turned to white collars for official purposes only when the first trade missions arrived from western Europe, but they could hardly then have been called a fashionable lot.

With the coming to Moscow, however, of European diplomats with all the sartorial traditions of the Soviet foreign office who have to deal with such perfectly tailored emissaries blossomed out in frock coats and all their accompanintents.

spilt milk is the huge sum sent weekly to the mail order houses. We're not crying about it. There is no use. But our's is not the only loss! If we had but 5 per cent of this business added to our present turnover, we feel sure we could treble our staff. thus providing more opportunities for local employment and also carry a greater and more varied stock to supply your needs. Thus possibly in time the city would be supplied with a real department store at which the people at nearby points would shop, instead of with the catalogue houses.

This is your problem, Mr. Citizen, whether you be wage earner, business or professional man, as the children of today will be seeking employment tomorrow. Give us the support we merit and we will endeavor to solve a question which means more to Rupert than does a grain elevator.
