Labels Puzzle Shoppers in Great Britain

LONDON — Wholesale and retail clothing firms in Britain have reached a deadlock with the manufacturers on the definition of those common trade words — "wool" and "worsted."

The problem arose from a proposal by the Retail Trading Standards Association that labels clearly identifying the material should be attached to all cloths and clothing sold on the retail market.

The association had received many complaints from women

Change of Plan Sometimes Helps

I might give the title "Stop, Look and Listen" to the forthcoming series of hands. Too often a declarer will start off on a certain line of play and barge right through to the bitter end on that same line, regardless of what may develop in the meantime.

Mr. Abel is guilty of this at times. He goes into a long huddle about how to play a certain suit, finally thinking himself into a coma which eliminates the possibility of hitting on another plan which might be better than the first, or at least give him an extra chance for his contract.

Look at today's deal, for example. Mrs. Keen opened the trey of spades, the four went up from dummy. Mr. Dale false-carded with the queen and Mr. Abel won with the king.

Immediately Mr. Abel fell in love with the spade suit. He wondered if Mrs. Keen had led from four or five to the jack or from a singleton or doubleton. He wondered whether Mr. Dale had false-carded.

With a sure diamond loser, he had to figure out some way to get rid of two clubs. Of course the spade suit would give him the necessary discards if he could guess the location of the jack.

After cashing the ace and king, he led the nine of spades and went up with dummy's ace. He led back the 10, on which Mr. Dale played the six spot, and finally decided to ruff it. When Mr. Dale discarded on this trick the hope of setting up two good spades was gone.

Next Mr. Abel led a club and finessed dummy's nine, hoping Mrs. Keen had both queen and jack of the suit. But Mr. Dale won and cashed the ace of diamonds for the setting trick.

If Mr. Abel hadn't got so fascinated with the spade situation, he would have seen the obvious play of leading a diamond up to his king.

This would have given him his contract because it would have set up his king of diamonds on which a club could have been discarded from the dummy. And, if the ace of diamonds had been wrong, the spade and club plays would still have been available.
