PROSPERITY IN INDIA TODAY

Country Has Plenty of Money and Trade Balance is Favorable
WAGES HAVE INCREASED
Good Crops Responsible to Large Extent for Condition of Country

(By Canadian Press)
NEW YORK, March 4. — The complete report of trade and finance in India recently issued by the British government, showed so much prosperity in that British Dominion that the British public itself was surprised, says the London correspondent of the Wall Street Journal, in a summary of the report published here.

According to the correspondent the report showed that India had taken her place as an industrial nation; that India is relatively more prosperous than Great Britain; that India has more money at the present time than she knows how to spend and that in the main the country is more prosperous and contented than at any other time in her history.

High spots in the government report as noted by the correspondent were as follows:
Exports Over Billion
For the past three years India has had a favorable balance of trade. She has piled up $1,000,000,000 of spending power since 1921.

Last year her exports were $1,200,000,000 and her imports $800,000,000.

India has had four good monsoons. She has had four years of favorable weather and good crops. Never before has she had such large crops and high prices.

The boom in tea has made many new fortunes in India. There are tea shares now selling in Calcutta at eight times their par value.

Wages are up 80 per cent while the cost of living has risen only 67 per cent. An average workman in Bombay is now receiving $4.35 a week. He pays $2.40 a week for food and $2 cent for clothing and 28 cents for rent.

India is now producing nearly 10,000,000 bales of jute a year. Her biggest crop is cotton. Her crop in 1924 was over 5,000,000.

COOLIDGE INAUGURATION TODAY WAS VERY SIMPLE— HUGE CROWDS ATTENDED.

mittee called at the White House to escort the President to the Capitol. This was soon after eleven o'clock. Pennsylvania Avenue, despite the restricted program which cut down the show, was packed as the President, escorted by a troop of cavalry and guarded by secret service men, passed along. At the Capitol he went at once to the President's room adjoining the senate chamber and busied himself disposing of acts of Congress which either became laws by his signature, or which under the constitution got "pocket vetoes" if he chose not to sign them.

Compared with Harding
The prelude to the inaugural procession, for the president's journey to the Capitol is always the first part of the actual ceremony, was quite different to that of four years ago, for President Coolidge had no outgoing president to accompany him. Four years ago, Warren Gamaliel Harding, a picture of robust health so soon to pass away, rode with the pathetic figure of Woodrow Wilson and with deprecatory gestures to the crowd, stilling cheers intended for him, out of consideration for the already dying man who rode in the carriage beside him. Little did any one dream that rolled another inauguration had rolled around. Harding would have preceded Wilson to the great beyond.

While President Coolidge was at work in the President's room at the Capitol Vice-President Clegg Dawes and his party arrived and took their places in the Vice-President's room where they were greeted by Senator Cummins of Iowa, who since Mr. Coolidge became President has presided over the Senate. There Mr. Dawes and his party awaited the beginning of the Vice-Presidential inaugural ceremonies in the senate chamber, which preceded by a few minutes the inauguration of President Coolidge in the open air outside.

The senate galleries early had been filled by those fortunate enough to get cards of admission. Many women scarcely less well known than their husbands in national affairs shared places with members and families of the diplomatic corps and the official set.

Senate Met

Just as the Sixty-eighth Congress died by constitutional limitation at noon, the Senate to the sixty-ninth Congress came into being, called in special session to consider executive appointments, and incidentally, to inaugurate the Vice-President. A special session of the Senate is really not necessary to inaugurate the Vice-President; he could take the oath of office before a justice of the peace if he chose, and then meet with the Senate when it assembles in regular session next winter, but it is the custom.

The diplomatic corps, all invited to the ceremonies, assembled in the marble room which adjoins the chamber resplendent in their gorgeous full dress court uniforms.

Then came the justices of the Supreme Court, headed by Chief Justice Taft, in their sombre black silk robes of the bench and taking chairs placed for them at the right of the incoming Vice-President. After the members of the House of Representatives entered through the main door and took places reserved for them on the west side of the chamber, while the senators gathered at their reserved places on the east. Sprinkled among them were distinguished officers of the army and navy, a few former members of Congress and last, persons who have publicly received the thanks of Congress and therefore are entitled to places on such occasions.

700 Present

When all the party was assembled the senate chamber, a comparatively small room which ordinarily seats 96 senators and attaches, contained more than 700 persons on the floor, with many of them necessarily standing.

When all was ready in the chamber, President Coolidge, escorted by the committee on arrangements, was shown into the chamber through the main door, and to a seat on the floor at the right hand side of the

Were the "Good Old Days" Really Good?

WHEN you hear an old-timer sigh for the days of his forefathers, smile quietly to yourself and think of this.

The ancients got along without automobiles, soap, stoves, tooth-brushes, window-glass, breakfast foods, tele-phones—without practically all of the things we consider the bare essentials of life.

There never has been a time when life bettered itself so rapidly and so consistently as now. New conveniences and new comforts are continually being thought out and brought out for your benefit.

In order to reap the advantages that are yours to-day, you must read the advertisements. They bring you news of all that the world of invention and discovery is doing to make your work easier, your home life more pleasant, your clothing and food problems less difficult. They keep you informed of all that is new in the markets and stores. They tell you not only about the goods, the styles, the varieties and prices, but also where and when these things are to be had.

The advertisements are messages from the business world to you. Heed them.

Amplifying devices at the top of the President's stand made his words clearly and distinctly audible to the edge of the crowd, and microphones placed before him carried his voice throughout the country and to some distant parts of the world by radio.

At the conclusion of the President's address, the Marine band struck up a lively air; the president took his place at the head of the inaugural procession which was waiting in formation in the streets and avenues converging at the Capitol, and led the way back to the White House by way of Pennsylvania Avenue.
