Group Government Comes To Stay.

However much we may deplore it, group government seems to have come to stay. The tendency seems to be toward greater independence in politics instead of toward greater cohesion of the big parties. Exceptions to this will occur, especially as strong leaders of the Mussolini type arise, but that will be more or less of a freak. With independence of thought must come a desire for independence of action. Members will unite on a great cause but will demand freedom of action on matters of less importance.

The world is finding it difficult to adjust itself to changing conditions. As the younger people grow up after a public school education where all are on an equality, they will be more assertive of their rights as individuals and this will show itself in public life.

Rights Of Farmers To Kill Own Stock.

An effort was made by the city council to secure for farmers of the interior the right to kill their own stock in the Burns abattoir, which is to be built. The idea was commendable. It would be a good thing too if such a right could have been secured. At the same time we must agree with Alderman Larsen when he said it was desirable in a case like this to be fair. It looks simple enough on the face of it but does not work out in practice. If the Burns Company is putting up the cash for the building and the city is granting no privileges in the way of free site or free water or light or power or taxation, it does not seem clear why we should expect to get privileges from the company.

The main objection is that a jobber may also be a small farmer and claim all the rights of being able to kill at the establishment even though he is a competitor in business who would use the privilege to undersell.

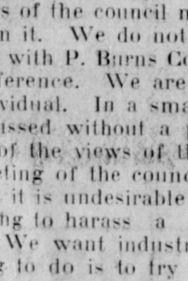

If the city expects to get privileges it must give something in return. We have been asking for this abattoir for some time and now we are getting it we can hardly dictate the terms unless we are prepared to pay for the right.

The city has the right to stop the company erecting the abattoir here. Also the company has the right to stay away and put its money elsewhere. If we are to make progress we must have the name of being ready to treat capital fairly when it is proposed to invest here.

If the city wishes to give the farmers some privileges, it should do so and the action would be most commendable. At one time a little shed was built where farmers might come and sell their produce in the city but it was not a success. It might have been possible to have made a deal with the big meat firm to secure privileges for the farmers but hardly without a quid pro quo.

Criticize Measures Not Individuals.

In mentioning this matter members of the council must not think that there is anything personal in it. We do not happen to know who is responsible for the deal with P. Burns Company. If we did know, it would make no difference. We are discussing the principle rather than the individual. In a small place it is difficult for anything to be discussed without a personal element entering. We know nothing of the views of the company except what came out at the meeting of the council Monday, but what we wish to stress is that it is undesirable for a young city to get the reputation of trying to harass a concern that is trying to do something here. We want industries and if we are to have them the only thing to do is to try to treat them well. Make it attractive for them to come. There is no need to give bonuses but we can at any rate make it pleasant for them to operate and refrain from trying to get something from them without paying for it.

The Man in the Moon SAYS:-

BECAUSE a person is a good mixer it is no reason to think he would be a success at tending bar.

NOW that bar tending is to be a real profession once more, doubtless protests will again be made against the name. Some such name as barrister, the knights of the bottle and glass consider would be more appropriate.

It threw down the Rotary sign
And broke windows eight or nine
And is talked about by everyone you meet.
