Used Toilet Soap For Washing Pigs
TORONTO (CP)—A 600-acre farm on the northwest outskirts of Toronto, where pigs once were bathed with toilet soap and cows 'bought in white tile stables, has been sold to make way for a housing development.

The 'model farm' was built by David Alexander Dunlop, a Mat-tawa, Ont., lawyer who amassed a fortune after he scraped together $2,400 to buy a share in a mining venture at Cobalt. He later became vice-president and treasurer of Hollinger Gold Mines and at the time of his death had a fortune of $5,759,558.

His wife died in 1946, leaving the estate to her son, Moffat Dunlop, her only heir.

The farm was established 40 years ago and during its peak years attracted distinguished visitors from many parts of the world.

Dr. R. M. Jenkins, an agricultural expert, was employed as farm manager. Music was provided in dairy barns and chickens houses. Farm workers said the animals found soft, classical music most enjoyable.

The pigs that were bathed twice a week with warm water and toilet soap were then rubbed down with olive oil. They literally shone with cleanliness.

Until 20 years ago, each cow was given a daily going-over with a vacuum cleaner. The nearly 100 employees on the farm all wore white clothing. Horses drank from enamelled basins, and their stalls were of polished maple.

MAPLE PROVINCE
Quebec produced 85 per cent of maple syrup and 93 per cent of maple sugar produced in Canada in 1952.

Mr. Abel Tripped by One-Track Mind

Many contracts are defeated which should have been made, simply by the declarer thinking through every reasonable play instead of just one.

In today's deal, for example, Mr. Abel should have made his contract of four hearts in spite of the bad trump break. He gave it a lot of thought and mentally covered several of the salient points involved. But he failed to think through to the end. If he had, surely he would have discovered a simple safety play which was almost certain to bring him success.

Veteran Cleric Of Rugged West Man of Talents

CALGARY (CP)—A quiet, ordered existence in a peaceful parish never would have suited Canon W. E. Herbert of Calgary, who has just celebrated his 50th anniversary in the service of the Anglican Church.

Now assistant rector at Calgary's Cathedral of the Redeemer and 78 years old, Canon Herbert pioneered Anglican missions in northern Alberta in the early part of the century. His career is greatly different to the accepted version of a minister's life.

His first mission field when he came to Canada in 1908 was an area of 1000 square miles in untamed country north of Edmonton, and despite its extent had only about 1200 persons on it. For Canon Herbert, as much at home on horseback as behind a pulpit, this was not too much of a problem.

But on his visits through the territory with archdeacons of the diocese, he had more than his share of worries.

On one trip, a visiting arch-deacon fell into a stream and missionary Herbert pulled him out of the mud. On another occasion an arch-deacon was thrown from a wagon. A third deacon, who vowed he would never return to the territory, had to eat his meals from the mantel-shelf after following Herbert on a tough horseback round.

Canon Herbert acquired his first automobile in 1928, as a gift from the parishioners at Stettler. He was tempted to abandon it when he found he had more trouble making it run than he ever had with his beloved horses.

Before he 'retired' to Calgary 11 years ago, his nomadic missionary life was packed with humorous anecdotes gained from many years of work among the homespun Alberta people.

He recalled one rural church in Stettler where a hen insisted on laying an egg on the altar once a week. He could never figure out this unusual offering until one day he caught the hen in the act.

That led to an argument with the farmer who owned the hen and who wanted the eggs back. Canon Herbert convinced the farmer that all such gifts were the property of the church.

Mice were another of his early problems. The mice had a habit of storing grain in the church organ for the winter ahead. When they started eating the felt out of the organ, that was too much.

Canon Herbert recalls a few astute farmers who took advantage of his love for horses. They would offer him the use of young unbroken colts. And when the canon had the colts nicely broken into the saddle or harness, the farmers would suggest they be returned.

He'll tell you that city life was never like that.

won. Mr. Abel then led a small heart and captured Mrs. Keen's queen with the king. He next laid down the ace of hearts and verified the bad news.

At this point it was clear that if he took out all of Miss Brash's trumps, he would have none left himself. Since he had only nine tricks in sight (four clubs, four hearts and a diamond), he would have to get his 10th trick from the spade suit and that would involve letting the enemy in. With trumps gone, they would run their entire diamond suit against him.

Well, leading four rounds of trumps was out of the question. But the situation didn't seem to be too serious. At trick four Mr. Abel led a spade and put up dummy's king. Mrs. Keen won with the ace and returned a club which Miss Brash ruffed. After winning a diamond trick, Miss Brash just had to wait for a spade trick at the end to defeat the contract.

The proper, and by no means double-dummy, play was to win the second round of hearts with dummy's jack and lead a spade from the board. If Mrs. Keen should win with the ace, Abel would have two good spades. If Miss Brash won, then there was no way for her to ruff a club.

Since Miss Brash had bid spades, shown up with as many as four hearts, and led diamonds, surely she was the one who could sensibly be figured to be short in clubs.

If, on the spade lead from dummy, Mrs. Keen had played low, Mr. Abel's queen would have won. And since that represented his 10th trick, he could have cashed his remaining trumps and clubs to rack up his game.
