Have Canadian Flag That Is Distinctive.

The Canadian flag today is not distinctive. The detail of the coat of arms is so small it means nothing and it does not represent all the provinces. What is needed is a simple device that will be easily recognized all over the world. Australia has such and Canada could easily select one.

The beaver, representing Canadian industry, would be a very suitable emblem on the red ensign. Some would prefer the maple leaf but it has no meaning. True it is ornamental, but that is all.

The beaver, the animal that saws wood all the time, would be an excellent emblem. It could be made ornamental if a good artist were given the work of designing one.

Armorial bearings or ancient heraldic designs do not mean much today. What Canada needs is something new and original.

Trade Improvement Throughout Country.

With Canadian currency at par, with annual exports nearly three times as valuable as in 1914 and imports only a third larger than before the war, with a decidedly larger proportion of our imports coming through our own ports and only half as much coming to us through the ports of the United States, Canada's position in international trade and finance is now far stronger than most people realize, says the Royal Bank monthly trade report. While it is true that we have experienced a prolonged depression which has left a strong feeling of pessimism among our manufacturers and business men, a readjustment has been taking place that is steadily strengthening our financial position.

Reports indicate that this spring has been favorable to agriculture and that soil, moisture and crop conditions are generally satisfactory in Canada, with the exception of points in Saskatchewan where cool weather is reported to have interfered with germination. While there is no great volume of building, yet the large scale of construction in Toronto and Vancouver is surprising. Most manufacturing plants are busier than in the preceding month and the unemployment situation is not serious. Mining operations are in full swing all over the country, and with the exception that there are bad conditions in the coal mines, we may regard the mining situation as quite prosperous. Prospects are bright for the salmon canning industry in the West, for agriculture in the Prairies, for manufacturing in the industrial centres and for the pulp and paper industry in the East. Altogether developments of the moment are quite encouraging and there should be only a minor reaction, if any, this summer.

The lumbering situation is undoubtedly bad. In fact, operators report that prices are so low that most current contracts are carried out at a loss. In order to find a market, Canadian lumber must be exported and the United States furnishes the best market. One factor which is upsetting that market is the situation in Idaho where trees are being cut on a basis of so much rent per acre, permitting the complete destruction of the forest. Such destruction may quickly exhaust Idaho's resources, but in the meantime lumbering can only be carried on at a disadvantage in those regions where commonsense or law makes some conservation requirements.

Foreign Trade Is On Increase.

For the fiscal year ending March 21, 1925, Canada's total exports amounted to more than one billion dollars in value, while her imports were only about three quarters as large; this means that we have reduced the volume of per capita imports to about three quarters of the value of those we were importing before the war. The volume of our exports, however, is 60 per cent larger than in 1914; while the total dollar value of exports was 2 1/2 times as great as at that time. So much has been written concerning the importance of Canada's dominant position in the grain trade of the present and future, that there is little need to emphasize the importance of this contribution to international trade. It is recognized that with the increase of population in the United States, it will not be long before the United States is predominantly an importer rather than an exporter of foodstuffs, and for some time to come Canada must be looked upon as the great granary of the world.

SIGNAL TOWER IS DRAMATIC

In the story shown here at the week end "The Signal Tower," five people, David Taylor, Sally his wife, six year old Sonny, their boy, Gerlie, Sally's cousin, and Joe Standish live in an isolated cottage high up in the mountains. Taylor and Standish have turn-about watches on a railway signal tower close by.

Although Gerlie attempts to enquire the passion of Standish, in spite of her cousin's vigilance, she only succeeds in arousing his utter disregard. In her zeal-ousness to protect Gerlie, Sally only makes herself more desirable in the eyes of Standish. Gerlie is severely reprimanded by Sally and ordered to leave for home.

Standish overhears the argument and at once surmises that Taylor's wife is jealous. He waits until Taylor is on watch before he makes any advances. Sally is horrified and repulses him. He cannot believe that she is really indifferent to him. Accordingly, next day when he is relieving Taylor, he pays his portion of the rent, knowing the couple are in need of his monetary assistance to pay off the indebtedness of their little home.

Sally tells her husband of Standish's behavior as soon as he comes off watch. Taylor at once flies into a rage and returns to the signal tower with all of Standish's belongings in a bag. He throws the bag at his fellow worker's feet and demands that he find another abode. Standish makes a damaging remark regarding Sally for which Taylor knocks him down.

Work in the tower must continue. Taylor sends his wife a revolver as soon as he goes on duty in order to protect her in case Standish should attempt to enter the house. Before giving the firearm to sonny to take to the house, Taylor carefully removes all the cartridges. The boy playfully replaces one when his father is not looking.

Standish in the meantime has gone into the nearest town.

While Taylor is on watch, a violent thunder and lightning storm comes up. His relief hour passes and still Standish does not appear. Taylor is distracted for fear of his wife's safety. Finally, Standish turns up, drunk, and pretends even greater intoxication in order to torment Taylor. A message comes over the wire; the rear cars of a freight train high up in the mountain have broken loose and are rushing wildly toward a passenger train that is on the upgrade.

Taylor takes the message. An accompanying order states that an attempt will be made to derail the cars at a station further up the pass. If the derail-

WALKED THE FLOOR FOR HOURS NERVES WERE SO BAD

Wherever there are people who are troubled with deranged nerves they will find in Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills a remedy that will restore the equilibrium of these deranged centres and bring back the shattered nervous system to a perfect condition.

Mrs. W. W. Aulhouse, Woodrout, Ont., writes: "After having a severe attack of bronchitis I was left in a very weak, run-down condition; my nerves were all broken up; could not sleep at night, and would have to get out of bed and walk the floor for hours."

"After using a box of MILBURN'S HEART AND NERVE PILLS I began to feel much better, and after taking a few more boxes I could enjoy my rest as well as I ever did. I always recommend them to all my friends."

Standish Rushes Away

Standish snaps out of his drunken stupor when he hears the orders flicked over the wire. Now, he figures, is his chance to go to Taylor's house and determine his status with Sally. He rushes out of the tower and leaves Tolliver at the post of duty.

While Taylor is straining at the spikes in the rails, Standish is attempting to force his way through the barricaded bedroom door to Sally. Several times Taylor in an agony of suspense, decides to give up his task. The lights of the caboose of the mad cars gleam evilly through the trees high up on the pass and persuade him to stick to his task. He manages to spring the rails in time to save the passenger train.

Sally steps out of the storm. She is torn and dishevelled. Taylor stands mute as she tells her story; Standish had attempted to attack her. Thinking she would frighten him with the revolver she dragged it from its hiding place in the bedroom closet. Distracted, she pointed it at the locked door and clicked the trigger. Standish was dead.

With a cry of gratitude Taylor gathers his wife in his arms forgetting for the moment that he is a hero.
