Immigration To Canada Discussed.

A correspondence has been going on in the London Times in regard to the need of immigrants in Canada. Someone who son was in charge of the kitchen. signs himself "A Canadian" leads off by stating that Canadians are just as well off without immigrants. 'He says:

"Sir Evelyn Cecil in his letter says that the essential need of Canada is suitable population. That seems to be a very widespread opinion, but I wonder if the holders give it very much ! thought. After all, when we speak of Canada and its welfare we mean the welfare of the present inhabitants, but would Canadians be better off if they had a population of a hundred millions like their cousins to the south? If so, why is the average individual in the United States not better off materially or socially than the present inhabitants of Canada, for that they are not is an acknowledged fact?"

Answer Given By Another Correspondent.

This is followed by another correspondent, Denis Crane, who says:

"In contending that immigration will lower the standard of living for Canadians, and in citing the experience of the United States by way of example, your correspondent, "A Canadian," overlooks an important consideration.

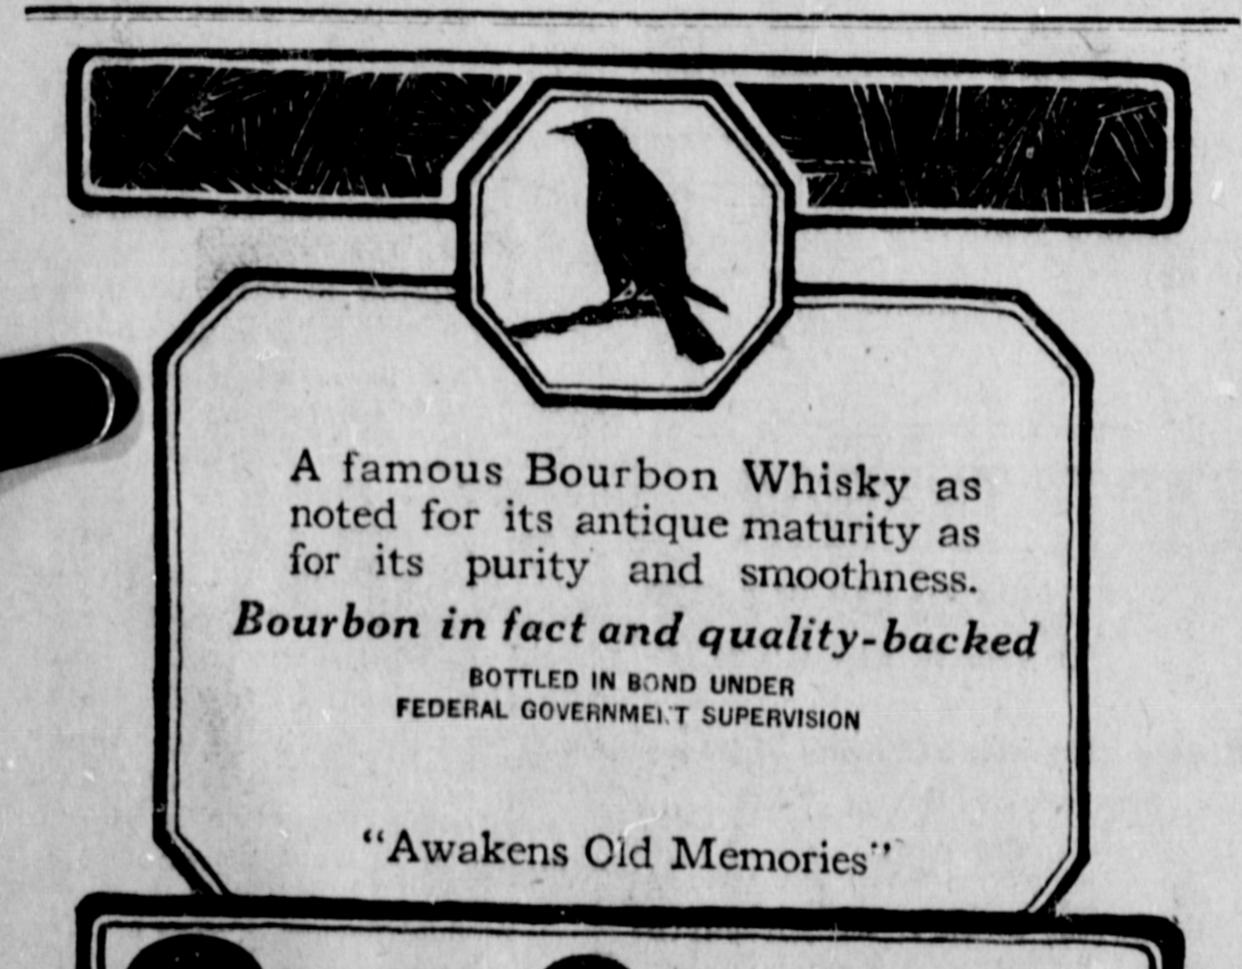

"Here are two countries of approximately the same area with roughly equivalent natural resources (though, as a matter IT rains, I own - but then it of fact, Canada is 700,000 square miles larger and in some important respects richer than her neighbor). But America has Much harder in July; more than 106 millions of people to support, whereas Canada, And May, I rather think refrained according to figures just published, has only 9 4 millions - a From any brighter sky; number quite maedquate to develop her natural wealth. Double, It isn't warm-but, if you please, treble, by assimilative and selective methods, the Dominion's It wasn't warm in June, present population, and by all the laws of economic progress and And days as dull and damp as until the point of diminishing returns has been reached the material and social status of her citizens is bound to advance.

"The comparison is false in another respect. The population of the United States has increased since 1900 by nearly 30 so let us raise a joyous shout millions; that of her neighbor by tess than 4 millions. Canada's And cease this vain repininggrowth has been slow and sure, for her newcomers are carefully We'll wear our weather inside sifted: America's has been fast and not over-fastidious, for it is only lately that she has made distinctions and imposed a quota.

Main Point Is Missed By Both.

The main point in the immigration question is missed by We seem in measurable reach both correspondents. They forget that the populating of a great Of summer all year round! area like that now existing in Canada is more than a national problem. It is a world problem and concerns every other nation. This point of view is gradually being taken and will be more so the bottom, unless he is learning in the future. While Canada has the right to control her own to swim. affairs, she has no right to control them in such a way as to interfere with the well being of the rest of the world.

The world today needs the great open spaces which exist investigate how many accidents here and some nations need them more than others. China and have happened to the new year Japan need them very badly and unless they are settled with resolutions. whites, the time will come when the Japanese and Chinese will demand the right to use them. At present we are in no position to contest those demands, except through the force of the keeps the calf away from the British navy. We have no means of defending ourselves. As corn. long as we do not pit ourselves against the stronger countries, there is no danger of invasion, but migration is a very important question and one in which Japan is particularly interested to- | day. So the question simmers down to this, that we must either been born in mid ocean. populate those vacant lands with white people or the Japanese will some day populate them for us. Viewed in any light, it is an offense against society to keep vacant the fertile lands of Canada when they are needed by people of other countries for settlement purposes.

NEW YEAR DANCE OF ELKS AT ANYOX WAS SUCCESS THIS YEAR

ANYOX. Jan. 7. - Staging the annual New Year's dance with their usual success, the Elks were paid many compliments by the dancers who thronged Recreation hall for the occasion. Representing considerable labor on the part of a big committee the hall was extremely pretty, the decorations being most appropriate to the season. The dance continued from nine until hree, supper being served at 11 lo'clock. Throughout the evening, crackers, confetti and serpentine were much in evidence and jollity was the order of the evening. The Elks orchestra, of course, performed, the members being Stuart Steele, Paul Stevenard, Ed. Waterman, S. Armstrong and Jack Austin. The members of the dance committees were: decorations, Messrs. Thorley, Nickerson, St. Clair, Jack Cody, Jack Goertson, Jack Smith, Pete Wishart, Neil Forbes, Archie Morton and Sam Down. The refreshment committee consisted of Chas. Gray, Mike Cranley and Ed. Waterman, Jimmie Thomp-
