Canuck Scientist Famed in Britain For Wartime Work

By JACK GOLDING
Canadian Press Staff Writer

LONDON (AP)—Sir Charles Goodeve, the Winnipeg-born scientist who took much of the terror out of enemy minefields in the Second World War, gives the University of Manitoba a large share of credit for his achievements.

Sir Charles was recently awarded £7,500 by the Royal Commission on Awards and Inventions, for his efforts against the menace of magnetic mines. But the slender, 47-year-old scientist, who sailed for Canada aboard the Empress of Scotland on Aug. 26, says he could not have perfected his system known as "wiping" if he had not studied water and electric current at the University of Manitoba. At that time he was studying for his Master's Degree in science.

In an interview, Sir Charles said he would like to get one thing straight—there is no truth in the reports that he invented the "degaussing" method of demagnetizing vessels.

MINESWEEP VICTORY
What he did do was develop the "Double L (longitudinal) sweep," whereby minesweepers could detonate enemy mines harmlessly. That was early in the war. The Germans didn't catch on until 1943, and some scientific journals claim this anti-mine weapon was the Allies' first major victory over the Germans in wartime science.

Sir Charles got an O.B.E. for this. Then, on his own time, he produced an economical method of degaussing ships in the days before Dunkerque. In four days, 40 small ships were fitted with the anti-mine device. This is said to have saved the British government more than £10,000,000, and brought Sir Charles his £7,500 award.

"But I did not develop the degaussing gear for ships," Sir Charles said with modest emphasis. "I did produce the word 'degaussing.'"
"It happened one night after a very good dinner. The term 'demagnetization' had been selected to describe the magnetic mine antidote but I felt the Royal Navy would never accept it."

"FRIVOLOUS SIGNAL"
"After all, the army had its 'degaussing'—so I coined the word 'degaussing' (from a man named Gauss who developed physical theories regarding units of magnetization). I sent a frivolous signal to the Admiralty—and they accepted the designation."

Sir Charles obtained most of his scientific background at the University of Manitoba, leaving there in 1927 to go to Britain "because it was the centre of the scientific world." He was created a knight in 1946 and now is director of Britain's iron and steel research association.

He sailed from England this week to attend the first meeting of the Faraday Society ever held in Canada. About 20 top scientists from Canada, the United States and other countries are attending the two-day session in Toronto as guests of Canada's National Research Council.

Their subject is "the Reactivity of Free Radicals," which doesn't mean a political study. It concerns the actions of fragments of molecules.

Quebec Officials Say Driving Test Would Cut Losses

MONTREAL (AP)—Speed, negligence and Quebec's method of issuing driving licences without tests are blamed for 92 deaths and 4,900 injured in 10,661 traffic accidents this year in Montreal and district.

That was the toll here a week before the Labor Day holiday week-end. For the whole of 1951, the count was 89 deaths and 6,421 injured in 20,866 accidents. Deputy director Hilaire Beauregard of the provincial police says motorists are careless. "They pay little attention to road signs and think every highway is a straight thoroughfare with no turns and crossings," he said. City police say the main cause is speeding.

NO TEST NEEDED
But Jean-Claud Provost of the Quebec Safety League says failure to give driving tests or physical examinations makes it possible for anyone to get a driving permit. And he believes the Quebec driver, besides needing education in driving, has little courtesy on the road.

G. A. McNamee, manager of the Royal Automobile Club, blames the failure to impose driving tests, but says that education also plays a major role. "Many people don't know how to drive, even though they have licences," he suggested. "Education is the only way to stop such accidents. Sane and practical law enforcement would also help."
