United States Laws Become A Nuisance.

The laws of the United States in regard to immigration are enforced in such a manner as to become a nuisance to the people of that country. While anyone can understand why it is desirable to exclude a great many people, cases are continually arising where great hardships are worked. Take the case cited in the despatches today. Paddy Dillon has lived in the United States over sixty years and then an attempt is made to exclude him, just because he happens to visit on this side the line. Charlie Chaplin cannot keep his mother in the country because she is not in good health. Members of families are separated again and again and there seems to be no recourse. Yet at the same time thousands of people are crossing the line from either side and many of them do not return.

Probably Good Reason For Britain's Action.

The British government probably has some good reason for withdrawing from her position in regard to the Geneva war prevention treaty or protocol which was adopted last fall subject to confirmation by the respective parliaments. True the government changed directly after the protocol was adopted but that is not a sufficient reason for British statesmen to break it. As a rule the government is ready to stand by what a previous government has agreed to do, especially in matters of foreign policy. It is most probable there is something beneath the surface that cannot be publicly explained, which makes it undesirable that Britain shall tie her hands in the manner suggested by the League of Nations.

Reports From Germany Are Not Reassuring.

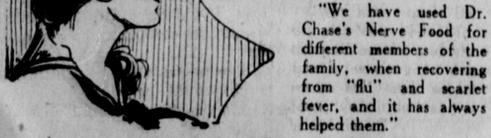

The reports coming from Germany in regard to the manner in which the Treaty of Versailles has been kept are not reassuring. Apparently that country has not by any means lived up to what she pledged herself to do. Also she has been making treaties with other nations which would possibly affect a general entente such as is proposed in the protocol. At any rate the action of Britain has to be taken largely on trust. If we believe the present government leaders are honorable and wise we have to leave a great deal to them. International politics are different in Europe from what they are here.

Britain Taunted By French Newspaper.

The taunt was flung at Great Britain by a French newspaper yesterday that she withdrew from the protocol because the Dominions ordered her to do so. That may possibly be true to a small extent. If the Dominions were opposed to it and refused to join, it would hardly be the path of wisdom for the Mother Country to go ahead on her own responsibility. If the Empire is to function as a unit in peace and war it must act as a unit in connection with treaties. Apparently the Canadian government has changed its mind since last year in regard to its attitude toward the protocol. It has been in close touch with the British governments and also with those of the other Dominions and something has happened of which we have not been informed.

"Best Thing in the World For Delicate Girls"

Mrs. John Bennett, Boggy Creek, Man., writes: "My little girl had organic nervous trouble, could not sleep, had severe headaches and fainting spells. This went on for three years, and three doctors helped her very little. After reading of what Dr. Chase's Nerve Food had done for others, I got some for her. She is now so well that she is like a different child. She is fourteen years old and looks the picture of health."

EPIC OF FAR NORTH COUNTRY

Death of Archie McGillivray King Under Tragical Circumstances When Travelling

FOUGHT BLIZZARDS

Dogs Were Killed For Food When Provisions Ran Out in Trackless Wilderness

The story of the death last week of Archie McGillivray King, postmaster at the historic placer camp at Manson Creek, in the wilds of the northern Omineca, while being rushed out as fast as dog teams could carry him over the bleak snows to Vanderhoof for medical attention, constitutes another of the epics that occur every now and then in the vast and desolated hinterland of Northern British Columbia.

King's illness was discovered by E. C. McCorkell of Vanderhoof when he arrived at Vanderhoof on a fur buying quest. On account of King's inability, his partner had been unable to leave on their cache for grub and McCorkell found the pair virtually at the point of starvation.

After staying with the starved men for a time, King failed to make headway and it was decided on February 29 that they should embark over the practically trackless waste for Vanderhoof where King might receive medical attention at the hands of Dr. W. Ross Stone. The assistance of an Indian and some dogs was secured and the trip was started. Tacla Lake was passed and King's condition grew worse and worse. As they approached Babine, King realized that his end was near and he calmly swore in his partner as postmaster at Manson Creek and the next morning he died.

The rest of the journey to Babine with the corpse tested the stuff of which McCorkell and his party were made. They were called upon to endure trials of the trail such as even service men are seldom submitted to. For fourteen days they floundered over an unbroken trail in the teeth of a raging blizzard, the fury of which was unbroken for seven days. Provisions ran out and one by one the dogs were killed to conserve supplies. So ravenous did the animals become that it was necessary to tie the corpse high in the trees at night so it would not be devoured. At last, half starved and all but exhausted, the party staggered into Babine.

The partner returned from here to Manson Creek and Mr. McCorkell and the Indian continued on out with the body striking the Canadian National Railway at Topley and proceeding thence to Vanderhoof which place they reached on March 5.

PRINCE RUPERT MENTIONED IN ALBERTA LEGISLATURE AS PROBABLE OUTLET FOR PEACE RIVER DISTRICT.

Pine pass. The Brule cut-off, he insisted, did not merit real consideration, as it could not serve the north country in a satisfactory manner.

The great wealth of the north, said Mr. Giroux, lay around the Lesser Slave Lake country, and in the areas north and south of the Peace, and the railway outlet should facilitate the transport of grain, lumber and fisheries industries of these parts.

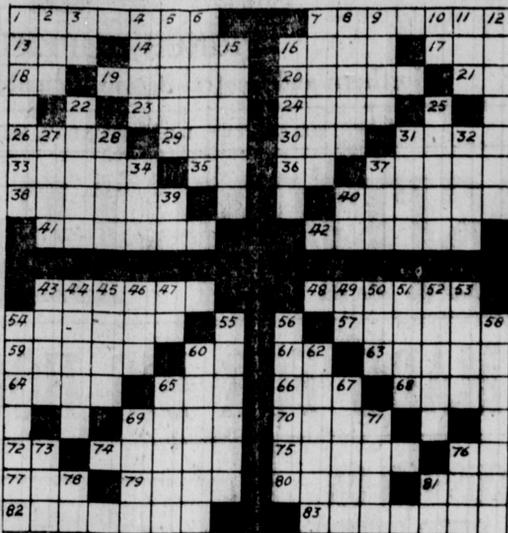

Barren Country

Quoting from the report of Capt. Haight, Mr. Giroux disposed of the Wapiti pass by saying that while it might be the most direct outlet to reach the Peace by this route, was to traverse a country barren of everything except timber. The same objection, he added, applied to the Monkman pass.

This left the Pine and Peace passes. Of the former, Mr. Giroux quoted from the report of the engineer, Mr. Humphreys, who stated that the Pine pass could not be surpassed from a railway standpoint, as it was the lowest in the Rockies with the exception of the Peace pass, which, however, is not as short. Connection would be made at Willow River, 19 miles east of Prince George, with the main line. The cost of building by this route would be about $27,000,000.

Taking the Peace pass, Mr. Giroux stated that it would go
