BACTERIOLOGIST IMPLICATED IN TYPHOID MURDER CASE AT CHICAGO

LOST IN STORM AT UNALASKA

Hugh Denessy Died When Crossing Island; Body Brought to Dutch Harbor

DUTCH HARBOR, Mar. 17.—Drowned Daisy arrived here today with the body of Hugh Denessy of Portland, who perished in a storm in Unalaska. He had attempted to cross the island with Ralph Stacey, his associate for the past two years in developing sheep raising in Alaska. Becoming bewildered in a fog, the two agreed to separate. Stacey reached headquarters of Chernofski.

After several attempts to find Denessy, Stacey climbed a hill with a spyglass and watched the sea which had been making dangerous trips away from the settlement. The dog went ashore beside the body of Denessy six miles from Chernofski.

FORCES PEACE RIVER ROUTE

C. McLeod Says There Is
Last Inland Empire to Open up Around Finlay Forks

While he thinks the Hansard route will be the one adopted as a temporary palliative, M. G. McLeod, a resident of Finlay Forks who is in the city, says the transportation problem of the Peace River will never be settled until a railway is built through the Peace Pass. There exists an immense inland empire so large that it is difficult to describe. The waterways already provide means of transportation to the Forks if only there were a railway to carry the produce to the coast.

C. McLeod is forest ranger general factotum in that part of the world. He travels each hundreds of miles by canoe on the waterways of the interior to know the country like a conversation in regard to different possible routes. Mr. McLeod strongly urges the Peace River in preference to the Pine. He says there is a route from Finlay Forks to Fort Fraser by way of Manson Creek and the Lakes passing Fort St. James on Stuart Lake that would be a splendid country.

CHICAGO, Mar. 17.—Typhoid fever germs, which killed William Nelson McClinton, the "millionaire orphan" were given to William D. Shepherd, the foster father and chief heir upon his promise to pay $100,000 after the settlement of the estate to C. G. Falman, head of a school of bacteriology, he told the state attorney today.
