The Man in the Moon SAYS:—

THE three R's in Prince Rupert seem to be reading, 'riting and radio.

MODESTY is one of those things people used to talk about.

TO a good many people a microphone would be a good birthday present to enable them to hear the voice of conscience.

AN electric shop is the only one in town where they charge people for charging.

IT is wrong to say prisoner at the bar, now that bars are obsolete. Prisoner in the blind pig would be more appropriate.

Ten Years Ago in Prince Rupert

February 17, 1915.

The regular monthly meeting of the police commission was held yesterday afternoon, those present being Acting Mayor G. W. Kerr and Commissioners A. W. Edge and Hubert Ward. Fines for the month totalled only $128.65.

"Down in Seattle they are putting up a hard fight to retain control of the fishing business," says Pete Rorvik who arrived from the Puget Sound city this morning." They know Prince Rupert is making a very strong bid for the business but they are leaving nothing undone to keep what they have so long had."

George A. Gordon, a pioneer Prince Rupert business man, has disappeared in Vancouver and inquiries are being made here.

SURPRISE PARTY FOR MR. AND MRS. BAILEY

The home of Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Bailey, 929 Sixth Avenue East, was seized last night by a party of friends, the occasion being a surprise party on Mrs. Bailey. The evening was delightfully spent in games, music, dancing and listening-in on the radio. Delectable refreshments were served at midnight after which dancing continued until the early hours.

The two tournaments this week in the second division billiard league will likely have an important bearing on the league standing and the chances of the St. Andrew's or Grotto teams of wresting first place from the Billiard Parlor. While neither of the two teams this week can overtake the first place team, either can materially improve its position and put itself very close behind again with the chance of coming out on top if good fortune keeps coming its way. However, the Billiard Parlor has a pretty good hold on the top position now and will only have to be careful to emerge in that same position when the schedule is completed. Tonight, the St. Andrew's and Cold Storage teams meet; Thursday night, Grotto and Great War Veterans.

Badminton is gradually becoming more popular as a winter sport. Yesterday for the first time the result of a Canadian championship match was sent out by the Canadian Press to all newspapers in Canada. Not only is the game being played in the large cities but in almost every village in the country there is now a hall devoted to the game. It is a faster game than tennis and develops all the muscles of the body without being unduly rough. It can be played in ordinary clothes and is suited to young and old.

Last year only one small club played badminton here. This year two played and a third talked seriously of starting. Next winter it is probable that three or four clubs may be in existence. The main difficulty is to find halls suitable for the purpose.

TRAINING FOR FOOTBALL

Combination play necessary for steady defence ---importance of centre-half skill

(By "Andy" Ducat, Manager of Fulham Club.)
(Reprinted from "Greenock Herald")

Many teams nowadays realise the value of definite forward tactics. The majority of amateur teams, however, still lack organised defence. Each defender must know exactly which man of the opposition he is marking; then combination tactics must be used to clear the ball.

Professional teams just now are almost unanimous that the full backs mark thhe two outside wing men while the halves concentrate on the inside three. Some of the finest amateur teams, however, retain the old system of having the backs mark the inside wingers.

My own plan for amateur teams is a combination of these two systems.

One serious fault attaches to having backs mark the outside wingers. Your backs are constantly being drawn out to extreme edges of the field in order to get at their man. Professional backs are generally fast enough to overcome this disadvantage. Amateur teams, however, should keep their two main defenders more centred all the time.

This is less tiring, and well-centred men covering each other are not so liable to lose their heads in moments of emergency.

When defending two halfbacks should look after the extreme wingers. Backs keep centred and help the centre half tackle the inside forwards.

Your attack, however, needs the help of your halves. The three halvesmust keep centred. In fact, the nearer they get to goal the more they converge over towards it. This means that they cannot give so much attention to the extreme forwards. The backs, being less pressed can spread out.

Therefore, when attacking, half-backs should look after the inside men while backs spread out to stop sudden rushes by extreme wingers.

Well-Planned Defence

Such a combined system as this is harder to impress on your men than a simple one in which you simply tell each defender to mark just one attacker throughout the game. Your men ought to be able to master the plan, however. Football demands brain work, and this is simple compared with some of the subtle points they will have to think out for themselves as the game grows keen.

Every plan is liable to break down; hard and fast rules are dangerous to state, and I usually avoid doing so. I do not think, however, that you will find a system of defence more valuable for amateur teams than the one outlined above. It should be tested thoroughly.

Although spread out while your forwards are attacking, the backs should not be in line. One should be considerably more advanced than the other. This gives the back who is nearer his own goal time to get across to cover his comrade should the attack suddenly be changed into defence.

Importance of Centre Half

Your centre half is the pivot on which your whole team revolves—more so even than the centre forward. The centre half covers more ground than any man in the team, yet he must never be so far away from the middle that he cannot get back in time to bottle up the opposing centre forward.

If my plan of defence is caried out his two helpers will be lying wide to mark the extreme wingers while the other team is attacking. The centre half, therefore, will have a tremendous responsibility. You cannot do better than allot to your most active man the position of centre half.

Your centre half is likely to have at least two forwards on his hands at once if his outside helpers are lying wide. This is bound to prove too much for the finest player. The back who is playing in advance, therefore, must now start to play in combination with the centre half just as though they were two backs.

More than that—he must play close to the centre half.

Two forwards can beat them if they take them one at a time. Clever passing will do it. You must not give the forwards a chance to pass first the centre half and then the back. They must be forced to take on both defenders at once. Your centre half is your best man; your back is undoubtedly a sound tackler. Together they ought to be more than a match for any two forwards.

Skilful Team Work

The reader spies a flaw in the plan! "Your other back," he points out, "is sometimes going to be left about twenty-five yards down the field, if the centre half and the advanced back are going to play so closely together. What about it? Do you call that combination between backs?"

Undoubtedly. Provided that the back who is down the field now combines with the advanced back, you get the whole defence knitted together. That is team work.

If the back down the field stays over on his own wing, you certainly get a painful gap between the backs. What happens, therefore, is that the other back now moves across to the middle of the field. He covers his companion. If you drew a straight line from the goal keeper to the spot where the centre half and the advanced back were playing together, you would find the other back standing on that line. He covers them both, and he covers the goal keeper too.

This is combined defence. Since the opposing wings are well covered by the two halves standing wide, the backs and the centre half are able to keep in a central defensive position.

BASKETBALL SEASON OVER

Sons of Canada, Senior Champions; Colts, Intermediate Winners, and Tiny Tims Winners in Junior

Three interesting games decisive of championship in the Senior, Intermediate and Junior Leagues marked the closing of the basketball season last night so far as the regular schedule of games for the 1924-25 season is concerned. The Sons of Canada won the Gillily Cup, significant of Senior League championship, by defeating the Elks 38 to 20; the Colts earned possession of the Intermediate League Grotto cup when they won over the Grotto by 39 to 26, and the Tiny Tims redeemed themselves in the Junior League and walked off the floor as winners of the McMordie Cup after beating the Colts 20 to 16. The games were watched by good crowds of fans including enthusiastic supporters for all the contesting teams.

The hefty work of three old timers at the game, Vic and Harry Menzies and Brick Skinner, was largely contributory to the victory by almost two to one of the Canucks over the Elks. Dave Balfour and Eddie Smith were particularly effective for the lodge men but the weight and experience of their opponents could not be overcome.

The line-ups were:

Sons of Canada—Harry Menzies, Vic Menzies, R. B. Skinner, Alex Mitchell, Sidney Bazett-Jones and G. Shenton.

Elks—Arthur Phillips, D. Balfour, Eddie Smith, Mike Budench, Willie Lambie and Vincent Meagher.

Intermediate League

Staging a come-back after several reverses during recent weeks, the Colts had the best of things in the Intermediate league affair with the Grotto. The latter were not able to finish off successfully the era of victories that they have been having of late.

The line-ups were:

Colts — Ralph Smith, Arthur Phillips, W. Wrathall, G. Shenton and D. Frizzell.

Grotto—W. Gray, D. Gurvich, Vincent Meagher, W. Cavalier, J. McNulty and G. Hill.

George Mitchell and E. A. Mann jointly refereed both the senior and intermediate games.

Junior League

The Tiny Tims started off the year with a bang but met with defeat in the three games immediately preceding the final. However, they were able to score the win last night necessary to ensuring them the possession of the season's championship honors. It was a close game ending in a 20 to 16 score.

The teams lined up as follows:

Tiny Tims—E. Dingwall, Y. Kaisuyama, P. Baisler, Eddie Walters, C. Thompson, H. Walker and I. Kaisuyama.

Colts—Spiro Gurvich, M. Comadina, J. McNulty, H. Macdonald and C. Cameron.

The final standings in the four leagues are as follows, the first team in each case now being champion for the season:
