POSED AS HERO WAS MURDERER

Count von Walges, Protege of the Ex-Kaiser, Turns Out to be Notorious Jaenicke

LONDON, Nov. 4.—Given a special audience at Doorn by the exiled ex-kaiser as one who had suffered much for the House of Hohenzollern at the hands of the French invaders, "Count von Walges" turns out to be none other than the notorious Jaenicke, ex-potter, murderer, escaped lunatic and cunning despoiler of trusting women.

For the past six years the "count" has been travelling through Germany, Austria, and Holland, receiving marks of popular sympathy and being honored by German and Austrian notabilities for his devotion to the cause of the fallen Hohenzollerns.

His tale was that he and his countess were faithful German residents in Alsace-Lorraine, who had been forced to submit to French rule when the lost provinces were taken over by France. One day one of the black troops in the French army attacked the countess, and the angry husband killed the aggressor on the spot. For this he and his family were expelled from French territory, and their goods and property confiscated.

Received as Hero

His first act on reaching German soil was to raise a body of expatriated Alsacians to work for restoration of the provinces to Germany, and in that role he was received as a national hero in Germany. The tale of his sufferings reached Doorn, and the ex-kaiser signified a wish to receive the "hero" who had refused to submit to the black shame in the reoccupied territory.

Was Nearly Crazy From Headaches

Miss K. Brill, 579 Redwood Ave., Winnipeg, Man., writes:—"I was troubled with such severe headaches that some times I was nearly crazy with them.

One day a friend told me about, and advised me to use so I tried it, and it has done me a world of good. I just took two and a half bottles, and I haven't had a headache for a long time, now."

ceive the "hero" who had refused to submit to the black shame in the reoccupied territory.

The count was received as the guest of the head of the House of Hohenzollern, and they spent many hours together discussing the supposed infamies of French rule in the occupied territories.

On the initiative of a prince of the Prussian imperial house public subscriptions were raised for the count to mark popular appreciation of his sacrifices for the fatherland, and von Walges moved about from mansion to mansion of the nobility, being received everywhere as a national hero for whom no honor could be too great.

Behind Prison Bars

A few weeks ago something happened to cause both the French and the Berlin police to make inquiries into the past of the "Hero Count of Thionville," as he had come to be known, and it was ascertained that von Walges and Jaenicke were one, and the same man, with the result that the "hero and martyr" is now once more behind prison bars in Berlin.

Twenty-five years ago Jaenicke, who was a potter, began to dabble in spiritualism. This brought him into contact with a young dressmaker named Louisa Bergner, whom he poisoned in order to secure her property. He was sentenced to death but, while waiting for execution, he developed symptoms of madness, and was removed to a lunatic asylum, where he remained until political troubles in Germany in 1918, enabled him to escape while a Communist mob was raiding the asylum.

It was shortly after this that he turned up in Germany as the "hero," moving about to receive recognition for his "heroism." He made the acquaintance of a lady who was a countess in her own right. He assumed the rank of count, and took over the care of the children of the countess as well as the family estates.

Until the police inquiries revealed the facts of his past Jaenicke was one of the leaders of the monarchist party in Germany, and he was recognized as one of the mediums for direct communication between the ex-kaiser and his sympathizers.

PUNISH PARENT NOT CHILDREN

Visitor From Canada to Russia Sees Great Changes in That Country

HAFFORD, Sask., Nov. 5.—Despite the eight-year rule of the Soviets, conditions in Russia are very unsettled today, according to M. Voloshin, a newcomer from Soviet Ukraine and a graduate of one of the Soviet high schools.

Personal property, he says, is still rather insecure on account of depredations of bandits and thieves, while the government is almost entirely under the control of the communists, the vast number of whom, according to Mr. Voloshin are youths.

The village life, he said, is entirely different to what it used to be. Instead of a "starosta" or overseer, the village now is ruled by a society. In the community there are various political organizations, chiefly pro-Communist and which exercise a powerful influence over the populace. There are the committees of small land owners and the "pioneers" both bodies operating as a kind of elementary school of training. To become a full-fledged Communist, a youth must have served his apprenticeship in either of these junior parties.

These two political organizations, Mr. Voloshin asserted, are all-powerful in the villages and cities and although they are independent of the government, exercise a strong influence there.

Teachers' Position

Instruction in the schools is now given in both Ukrainian and Russian. These languages are used for extensive Communist propaganda. Punishment of pupils in or out of school is prohibited by law, but the teacher or parent can be punished upon the child's own complaint.

A good crop this year, and a recent edict bringing about a drastic tax reduction, Mr. Voloshin said, has greatly strengthened the morale of the peasants generally, but farming methods in Russia, he intimated, were very antiquated when compared with those he had already observed in Canada.

JAPANESE LAND GREAT BRITAIN

Fly by Way of Siberia and Russia and One Makes Bad Landing on Arrival

The four Japanese airmen who have been flying from Tokyo by way of Siberia and Russia reached England on Monday after dark and were entertained at a somewhat delayed dinner at the Japanese Embassy in the evening, says the London Times.

The last stages of the journey were attended by a distinct spice of adventure and some risk, owing to the late hour at which they left French soil to cross the Channel. In the gathering dusk and mist they mistook their direction, and, instead of arriving at about 5.30 at Croydon, where a large gathering of official representatives of the Air Ministry and of British aviation were awaiting them, they landed at Farnborough, where one of the machines turned on its nose in some rough ground, though fortunately without injury to the occupants.

Major Abe, who is accompanied by Mechanician Shinowara, landed safely on the large aerodrome of the Royal Aircraft Establishment, but his companion, Mr. Kawachi, with his mechanic, Kalagiri, had to land in a small rough field. The propeller was smashed, but otherwise no damage was done, and Captain F. T. Courtney, who happened to be testing a machine at Farnborough, saw the mishap and at once motored out to the field. Then, on learning that the visitors were due at the Japanese Embassy at 8, promptly offered to motor the party up town, and by this means they were able to join their compatriots and other guests at the Japanese Ambassador's residence in Grosvenor square at 9 o'clock.

Major Abe's Story
Later Major Abe gave an explanation of their misadventure, and it is evident that considerable good fortune had attended them, for they had no idea when
