BODY OF MRS. FROST FOUND

Was Discovered Across Harbor by Fisherman Yesterday Afternoon—Police Take Charge

The body of Mrs. William Frost, who is believed to have been drowned early last Wednesday morning while coming ashore from a boat at the Cow Bay floats, was found yesterday afternoon lying on the beach on the other side of the harbor almost directly across from the dry dock. The discovery was made by a fisherman named Barney Amundsen who immediately reported to the police. The provincial police then went across the harbor and took charge of the body bringing it to the parlors of the B.C. Undertakers where it is being held pending further investigation. The condition of the body seemed normal and it is assumed that after the drowning, it was buoyed up by the heavy clothes and drifted across the harbor with the wind.

Before taking further action with respect to investigation, the police is awaiting the arrival of Dr. William Sagar, coroner, who is coming in from Port Simpson on the Cardena today.

ALASKAN BLUE FOXES RAISED

Easier to Handle Than Silvers and Cost of Starting Business Less

By Fred Cleary
Cleary Bros. Fox Farms, Seattle

It is often heard said, "The poor are getting poorer, and the rich are getting richer." Be this as it may, there is an outstanding feature which presents itself to the writer and it seems to be pretty well universally prevalent. The man to whom wealth has come from efforts of his own, you will find to be a man who has the nerve and the determination to step out for himself, venture his funds and his knowledge even in the fact of odds and against public opinion.

When we first talked of launching into the fox farming industry on a large scale we were told on every hand that our finances were as good as lost, because, said a close friend of ours, the fur business will soon be overdone, and a great many foxes fail to bring litters. This is our seventh year of operations and the fur business and the fox business are good and even better than they were then. We have found female fox that brought no litters the first year, but we have found so many more that did breed that we certainly have no complaints to make. If every female brought ten to fifteen pups why sure enough the fox business would soon be overdone; the same is also true of any business: If every man who believes in the blue fox, or silver, could invest and did invest in a pen or more of them, why we would sell out as soon as possible—but it requires money to start with, judgment to raise them, and perseverance to stay with the business—hence only a few ever start compared to those who inquire.

Diamonds and gold are valuable because of their scarcity. If they could be picked from trees they would lose their real value.

Smaller than Silver

The Alaskan Blue Fox is a trifle smaller than the Silver and carries a very beautiful pelt of very dark blue throughout. He is hardy, more so than silvers, and the fact that we have shipped them to Czecho-Slovakia successfully, and from Seattle to New York state, Connecticut, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and several other parts of British Columbia, and have orders now closed and paid for to go to Belgium and Germany, should be ample proof of their hardiness.

The kennel for the blue fox is used for Silvers, though it may be a trifle smaller, though we suggest the same size.

Perhaps some would like to know what the approximate cost of penning a pair would be. We have just completed a new ranch here in Seattle, at Juanita Point, on Lake Washington. Or, to be more exact, we have it partially complete—anyway at the present writing we have nearly 100 pairs of Blues on it, though some of these are being prepared for foreign shipment, and to other distant sections.

The best evidence of our faith in the Blue Fox, his ability to make money for his owner, lies right in this fact, that we took a new piece of land, carrying with it large trees, stumps, underbrush, etc., and with the aid of from three to fourteen men, in four weeks had it ready for, and had the hundred pairs of Blues upon it in pens. Even to piping spring water over 700 feet to the pens.

Making Pens

We have seen most of the pens and kennels, styles and ideas of the best minds in the fox business, and our pens are built along these lines. We laid out a plan for ten pens—five in a row. With shade trees left between, we cleared spaces 12 feet wide by 46 feet long for the pen (each pen) and then, 12 feet apart started another pen of like dimensions. The alley-way between the rows of pens will be 12 feet also. Each roll of wire contains 150 lineal feet, so it requires exactly two rolls to the pen, using wire for the top, sides, ends and the bottom, (called carpeting the pen). We use inch and a half mesh throughout—while it costs a little more, it is worth it. Also, if you can, always secure the wire that has been galvanized after weaving, instead of before, as it will last longer in the weather. The kennel itself is only a short job to build, and costs next to nothing for lumber. We advocate two nest boxes, one in each end, and in fact is the one advocated by the U.S. Government in its bulletin on Fox Farming. If you perform your own labor, a pen with the kennel can be built for $75, if you hire it done $100, depending upon the proximity of the wire, etc.

Easier to Start

The person who wishes to get into something better than ordinary livestock, better than grain farming or fruit growing and just as certain, and get away from mere wages for his time, should take up the Blue Fox. Its lower cost per pair, greater prolificness by nearly 200 per cent over the Silvers, makes it the best opportunity. You can buy three pairs of Blues at the pupping season, for the price of one pair of Silvers. You are then breeding something which is within the reach of thousands of people to hundreds who could buy Silvers—and, this holds true of the people who will eventually buy the pelts in the form of Blue Fox scarfs.
