TRANSPORTATION FOR DIFFICULT DISTRICTS GIVEN BY INVENTION

Recent Arrival From Sweden Has
Patents on Interesting
Mono-Rail System

A. J. Englund, a recent arrival in Prince Rupert from Sweden, is the inventor of a new mono-rail transportation medium which he claims is particularly suited to log and mineral transportation problems of this district. The invention is a vehicle on a single suspended rail, capable of carrying heavy loads and operated either by gravity or power such as gasoline engine or electricity.

Mr. Englund first perfected the vehicle in Sweden where there are now operating five such systems, each a couple of miles or so in length. He says that it is cheap to construct, more economical than present systems of a somewhat similar nature and is capable of handling much greater loads than aerial trams. The single rail is built on upright poles and the carriage is of unique design.

Any number of cars, depending upon the power used, can be coupled together with the motor installed on the leading car. The road is particularly suited for districts where an ordinary railroad would be too costly to construct. The system also has the advantage of not being affected by heavy snowfall during the winter, an obstacle that often interferes with other means of transportation.

Mr. Englund has obtained both United States and Canadian patents for his device.

Tenders have been received by the city council on printing for the assessor's department as follows: McRae Bros., $340.50; Rose, Cowan & Latta, $355. McRae Bros. also submitted a tender of $313 on slightly different specifications.

Editor of Daily News Goes Holidaying On to Hartley Bay

ARTICLE THREE

BRIN RIVER, Sunday—This is the garden of the gods, the finest thing I have ever seen. Most of the day we have been here revelling in its beauty. Like all fine scenery it baffles description. There are snowclad mountains all around and green water below and everything is so much grander than anything else I know that I hate to leave it. However, we have decided to pull out in the morning and go farther up the canal, although we both doubt if it will be possible to find anything as fine.

Our camp is beneath the trees, giant hemlocks, fifty feet above tidewater and looking down on the canal. The floor is covered with moss and ferns, an ideal spot, difficult of access, but worth the climb even if we did have to carry our bedding and cooking utensils up a rugged path. We were able to take several photographs from our camp that should prove interesting.

It is three days since I wrote last. I was then waiting for Dick at Hartley Bay. He arrived on the Venture soon after midnight and it was so dark we found it rather difficult to locate the camp and it was daylight before we tired of talking. Then we slept until ten o'clock and the "summer flop" gave the Gwen quite a tossing directly after starting.

I don't suppose you know anything about Owen's logging camp. We did not until Friday. It is not far from Hartley Bay. We passed it and got only a short distance beyond when water began to come into the launch rapidly and made it impossible to operate the engine. One rowed and the other hauled in an attempt to reach the logging camp but tide and wind were against us and progress was slow. Then it was decided that Dick should go ahead with the row boat and ask them to send a boat to tow us in. They did it immediately and on arrival made repairs for us. It was found that the stuffing box was off, the brass screws having worn away. I don't know anything about Owen's religion but I do know that they were good Samaritans in our case. I also found that they were regular subscribers to District and is a correction of The Daily News.

Dick has just been scolding Point. The original name was given the two geographic features by Captain Vancouver.
