IS FORCED TO MARRY AFTER BEING BOUGHT

"The Great Divide" is Story of Arizona and Mining Camps of that State

Ruth Jordan, a romantic and idealistic girl, reared along strict Puritanical standards in Boston, accompanies her brother, Philip, his wife, Polly, and Dr. Winthrop Newbury, a childhood sweetheart of Ruth's, to Arizona.

One night when Ruth is alone in the cabin, three drunken marauders are attracted by the light in the window. They see Ruth, and, becoming enflamed with passion, gamble to possess her. Stephen Ghent is the victor. But the other two, Shorty, a Mexican, and Dutch, are dissatisfied. So Stephen buys her from the former for a chain of gold nuggets and fights the latter.

After forcing her to write a note to her brother telling him that she is to be married, he takes her to the next town where the Justice lies the knot. Despite her pleas, he conducts her to his mining camp.

During the first three nights of their ride across the desert, Ruth visualizes her husband as the lover she has always dreamed of. But he, ignorant of her fine moral ideals, tears down with his passion the ideal she has woven about him. Stephen's mine yields rich returns, but, obsessed with the thought that she has been bought by gold, the girl refuses to accept any of the money. She weaves baskets in order to earn enough money to repay Stephen for the chain of nuggets he had given the Mexican.

Meanwhile, her brother, and

Dr. Winthrop Newbury, find her and induce her to return with them to the Jordan ranch.

Several months later, Stephen, still idealizing her, seeks her at the Jordan ranch, where he makes one last plea. She answers his entreaties by throwing at him the gold chain of nuggets which she has purchased from the Mexican. Whereupon she becomes hysterical and suddenly lapses into unconsciousness. Through a driving storm, Ghent makes a desperate effort to reach the village and the doctor. When the doctor's horse falls from under him, Stephen nobly gives the doctor his mount, leaving himself in dire peril.

A son is born to Ruth. And a week later, Philip tells her how Ghent had risked his life in order to get the doctor for her. To explain the reason for her horror, Ruth tells Philip the conditions of her marriage. Enraged, Philip levels his gun at Ghent, who is in the next room, and fires. The bullet goes wild and Ghent coming to Ruth says, "There's one thing you can't take from me—that's the man you've made of me." With that he plods his way down the trail with bent shoulders. Ruth calls to him to wait, and catching up with him, says, "Our meeting brought forth all that was strong and good in you, all that was weak and petty in me. Can you forgive me?"

That is the story of "The Great Divide."

SPORT CHAT

Miss Fanny Rosenfeldt of Toronto broke the Canadian record and in fact the world's for women at the Toronto Exhibition when she ran the hundred yards dash in eleven seconds flat. Miss Rosenfeldt, who refused to go to England recently with a team of Canadian girl athletes, was given a tremendous ovation on the occasion. Many prominent male athletes took part in the same meet including Joie Ray and De Hart Hubbard, the colored sprinter. A movement for a new Canadian Women's Amateur Athletic Union is progressing fast.

Oh why this melancholy grief, about the sere and yellow leaf that marks the passing of baseball? It doesn't matter—not at all. Although the prospect may seem drear, the hockey days will soon be here; and wont it seem serene and nice, to chase the puck around the ice? So do not moan about your fate, for other sports will compensate.—Portland Canal News.
