BLACKWOOD on Bridge

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Best Bet Is Lowest Card In This Play For Finesse

Mr. Dale is a practical bridge player. He does not believe in heaping criticism on an erring partner. "If you give your partner lessons during the play," he says, "one of two things will happen—both bad."

"If he understands what you are telling him, he will play better against you the next time he is your opponent, and how can that be good? If he doesn't understand, he will be more confused than ever, and confusion and resentment together will make him play even worse on the next deal."

In today's hand, Mr. Muzzy and Mr. Champion, bidding their respective cards to the hilt and possibly beyond, reached a contract of three no trump.

Mr. Dale opened the queen of spades which was won by dummy's ace. Mr. Muzzy now led the nine of diamonds from the board. He finessed the queen and cashed the ace, telling Mrs. Keen's two honors. But Mr. Dale's eight spot stopped the suit and eventually Mr. Muzzy went down one.

"Why the nine of diamonds, dope?" asked Mr. Champion nastily. "If you had led the six spot, you could have run four diamond tricks."

"I was trying to get a cover," Mr. Muzzy replied, lamely.

"Well, you got it," continued Mr. Champion. "But what good did it do you? You'd have got a cover by leading the six spot, too."

"I don't see much difference between the nine and the six," said Mr. Muzzy stubbornly.

"You're right. There isn't much difference," said Mr. Champion savagely. "Only one trick. Only the difference between making your contract and going set."

USEFUL HAUL
MONTREAL (CP)—Richard Pennington, McGill University Librarian, returned from Europe with 8,500 volumes garnered in second-hand book stores in Britain and on the continent. He explained most of them are straightforward texts which have been out of print so long they are almost rarities.

The bidding:

right, technically. And he went on to explain that when leading from the hand weak in a suit toward the hand strong in a suit, for a finesse, your best bet is usually the lowest card. This is true except, possibly, when the hand you are leading from is short of entries.

Mr. Muzzy followed this advice in the hand to be shown tomorrow—to the best of his ability, anyway. The result was not an outstanding success.
