Editor of Daily News Goes Holidaying

Homeward Bound

HOMEWARD BOUND!—Dick is left behind at Butedale to go south on the Venture tonight and I left the same place half an hour ago and the Gwen is chugging along at between five and six miles an hour along Fraser Reach northbound. The water is perfectly calm, the sun shining, and it is just half past nine o'clock. I should have been away an hour earlier but did not get up in time.

At Butedale we were the guests of Joe McPhee, customs officer, and one of the best men alive. Joe has a little green house all to himself and he keeps it spick and span. All the other houses are red but, as the representative of His Majesty, the customs office has to be different. There is an imposing notice on the door and in his official uniform, Mr. McPhee is an important personage in the cannery town. He is also extremely obliging and never causes unnecessary trouble or delay to vessels entering or clearing at the port. Everyone speaks well of him and of his work.

The night before last we spent in Fishermen's Cove opposite and a little south of McKay Reach at the entrance to Wright Sound. As had become our custom, we spread our blankets on the ground in the open and slept with only the broad canopy of the sky over us. The bed was hard and the black flies were offensive but we covered our faces and snored our loudest.

A Cold Morning

Remembering the rough seas of the previous day we were up early but it was cold and we shivered in our overcoats for half an hour or so. Two hours later we dropped anchor in a nice little bay where we lighted a good fire and prepared the bacon and eggs for breakfast.

There we rambled along the banks of a pretty stream and took a few experimental pictures.

We lunched near Butedale, and while sitting at our meal, an animal, probably a badger with fluffy grey fur and a dark head, suddenly joined the party. He rounded a rock and found himself unexpectedly in the midst of the luncheon group. We kept perfectly still and admired our visitor. He looked us over carefully and then decided he had better leave, which he did in a decidedly dignified manner. Later after rambling off we found him again in the camp sampling some remnants of fish we had left behind us.

Incidents like these, trivial in themselves, proved of great interest to us. Two minutes after I left Dick at Butedale and just after I caught his last waved adieu, I saw two deer on the rocks at the water's edge and approached quite near to them although not near enough to take a photo.

Homeward Bound

Everything went well on the homeward trip. The tide was against me a good deal of the time but I was anxious to be home in order to get away for a business trip to Vancouver and kept moving.

It would not be faithfully recording everything if I did not tell about the wolf I saw. It was when lunching at an unknown bay near the north end of Grenville Channel. It was a wild deserted place. I had anchored the launch, taken the dinghy ashore, made a fire, and was just dipping water from the stream nearby when, looking up, I saw a wolf loping across the beach. He stopped opposite the launch and sniffed and also nosed the dinghy. Then he went over to the grub and inspected it at a short distance. Having satisfied his curiosity he was making for the woods in my direction.

Here it was I railed at the fates which are so often against me, photographically. Here was a subject for my work and my camera was along with the grub. The wolf kept coming and I stood perfectly motionless so he would not notice me. He did not see me until about thirty feet away. I wanted to see him run so just then I threw up my arms and shooed him off, but he gave me the once over, turned in a dignified manner and loped gently across the stream and away. Not in any sense could his departure be called running away. He had perfect poise all the time and acted as if in command of the situation.

Wonderful Holiday

This is the last lap of the trip. I shall be home before midnight and there will be nothing more to tell. It has been a wonderful holiday, the best I have ever had. The weather man has been kind and everything has conspired to make the trip pleasant. Any little adverse incidents have simply added a spice of adventure to it.

To any who wish to get right away from the world of business I would suggest a launch trip. Forget everything as I did, and live in the great outdoors for a week or two. It is the best recreation I know.

The Lucky Youth

FORTUNATUS had only to don his enchanted cap and make a wish to obtain anything his heart desired. It is not given to ordinary mortals to have so simple and direct a mode of filling their wants.

But have you ever considered what a boon advertising has become? Everything you need or wish is displayed for your benefit in the advertising columns. Merchants and manufacturers use advertising to lay before you their most attractive wares. You have only to choose at your ease the things you care most about before actually going to see them in the stores.

Advertising is continually making the world better dressed, better fed and housed. It is increasing the world's capacity for things that elevate, improve and idealize the important business of living. It is a big, vital force in fostering convenient, comfortable and useful lives.

Empty your home of all advertised things and see the hole you make!
