Beware Of Using Firearms Carelessly.

The community was shocked to hear of the death of Edward Howe under tragic circumstance, and the sympathy of the whole community goes out to the family who have been so suddenly bereaved. Especially do we feel that the young man, David Hudema, who was present when the accident happened, is in need of sympathy.

From time to time we draw attention to the need of care in the handling of guns. This accident will act as a warning but by next season it will be almost forgotten. Those who go out after game cannot be too careful and boys especially should be taught to think all the time of the danger of the loaded gun.

Vancouver People Want Art Gallery.

Vancouver people who have made money and are looking for places to spend it where it will benefit the community have hit upon the idea of buying pictures and statuary for an art gallery. That is a very commendable object. Some day we shall possibly have something of the sort here, but the time is not yet ripe. In the meantime the public museum has been started and is making progress. Already there is a nice little collection and other articles are coming in and gradually making it an interesting institution.

U.S. Congress Will Now Play Politics.

Politics will be the lodestone in the first session of the Sixty-ninth U.S. Congress, which begins Monday at Washington.

Leaders of both parties will have as their chief concern the writing of records upon which they may go to the country in the 1926 congressional elections, which will crowd closely upon the ending of the session.

The Republicans will seek to enact a legislative program upon which to stand in asking the voters to return majorities for their party in both houses during the closing two years of the present administration of President Coolidge.

The Democrats will devote their efforts to focusing public attention upon what they will denominate the shortcomings of administration, legislative and executive, under the power of the Republican party, and to outlining a program of government which they would undertake to carry into effect should they be returned to the control of Congress.

In this process vast waves of words will inundate both chambers, but more especially the Senate, where there are fewer handicaps upon flights of oratory than in the House. In the latter body many political "speeches" will remain unspoken, but will find their way into the Congressional Record under the privilege of "extension of remarks."

Will Delay Work But Not Unduly.

Political manoeuvres and speeches will necessarily delay the work of Congress, but probably neither side will be loath to stretch the session out until mid-summer or later, for the Senate and House furnish a ready forum for political orators, a forum that has few counterparts anywhere else on the globe.

In the campaign which will be inaugurated almost immediately after the gavels fall on December 7, and which will be continued until next November, there will be involved every seat in the House and 33 of those in the Senate. The Republicans have comfortable majorities in both houses and their fight will be not only to retain them, but to strengthen their hold.

In the contests for Senate seats, however, the majority party will find itself on the defensive at the outset since 26 Republicans come up for re-election against seven Democrats, all of whom are from solidly Democratic states in the south.

David Wilton Tells Rotary Club How Wheat is Treated After it Reaches Mills

Now that Prince Rupert is about to become a grain port, people here are interested in anything pertaining to the grain business. That is why the members of the Rotary Club were particularly interested in an address on the handling of grain after it reaches the market by David Wilton of this city.

Mr. Wilton explained at the outset that he had been in the employ of the great Spillers firm for 25 years in the Old Country, where they had wheat coming in from all over the world. It was part of their work to examine the condition of each cargo on arrival, to note if the wheat itself was in good condition, if the lining of the ship had done its work of preventing damage and if the cargo had been properly stored.

Cleaning the Wheat

After delivery of the grain had been accepted, the first thing to do was to get rid of all foreign matters by a series of exhaust fans. The second stage was to separate any other grains such as oats or barley. Then the wheat was put through another process which automatically graded it according to size. Metal substances were taken out by means of magnets and stony substances by washing. The wheat was then dried until there remained only fourteen per cent moisture, when it was ready for the blenders.

Having wheat coming from all parts of the world, blending becomes necessary in order to secure the kind of flour needed. In that way only the best results could be obtained.

Smut had to be carefully watched for in all wheat coming in and when found had to be taken out. A small amount of smut would spoil the flour.

Milling the Grain

In milling the grain it was passed through four distinct processes. In the first it was cracked, further reduced in the second process and the brans extracted in the third. It was then passed over silks and sifted. Drying followed, the latter process being particularly necessary if the flour had to be stored.

The very white flour so much esteemed by patrons of bakers is bleached by electricity, this making it appear uniform.

Mr. Wilton said he felt Prince Rupert was about to be a grain port. He expected that private interests would come here before long. He had been in communication with certain grain interests that were looking for information in regard to the port and he felt sure something would result.

ROMOLA TONIGHT IN PLACE OF SEVEN DAYS

Famous Classic from the Novel by George Eliot to be Shown Here

The film for the picture "Seven Days" did not arrive this week but is expected at the next week end. In its place has come Romola.

"Romola" is founded on the novel by George Eliot dealing with the vibrant, pulsating life of the Italian Renaissance in Florence, when that city was in her golden age; the days of the splendid de Medicis and of the martyred reformer, Savonarola. The dates are 1492-98. "Romola" is a classic of literature and its transfer to the screen has revived interest in it to such an extent that the photoplay edition of the novel is making a new record for sales, and New York libraries admit they were unable to supply the demand that has been created.

Before the filming of the attack of pirates on a Fifteenth Century sailing ship in the Bay of Leghorn, one of the stirring scenes in the picture, it was necessary to train upwards of two hundred modern amateur pirates, each handling a long oar in perfect time. Evey one of the men who rode in the three galleys had to be as proficient as a member of an American varsity crew.

Keen rivalry developed among the oarsmen of the three vessels, for the crews had to be recruited from separate districts of the city of Leghorn, and in the course of practice they were always racing, while the triumphant yell of the winning crew could be heard for miles.

It is doubtful if the city of Florence had been stirred in years as it was with the coming of Lillian Gish and the moving picture company which invaded their fair city to film the romance. Florentines rise late and take life easy, and for awhile the natives refused to be disturbed, but with the rebuilding of the cathedral, an old church, and various extensive interiors, —and the busy Americans ransacking every part of the city for locations—the one topic of conversation was the "wild Americans" and their strange doings.

A LOT of people I know ought to get asbestos coats for their souls before sloughing off their bodies.

I MET a woman today who said she had finished her Christmas shopping. I enjoy a good lie even if it is told by a female person.

RAIN, oh rain you lovely rain,
When you cease to fall I get a pain;
And then I pray you may come again,
Rain, oh rain, you jolly old rain.

USED to be that you had to go to a fire to see hose, but just squint across the street now and you can see all you want any time.

SHE shed a tear, but that was all she could afford to shed, declared Jake, when telling of a prominent local lady.

ADAM and Eve
Had a jolly old time
In the garden of Eden
Most of the time.
But best they enjoyed,
And I know they were wrong
The apple that did not
To either belong.

So here in this land
Where we toil every day
And snatch as they pass
Joys that come our way.
The things that we like
Are the things that are banned.
It's the joy of adventure,
That pervades the land.

ONE thing about the good dying young is that there are not many people to nag at the rest of us.

THERE'S something the younger generation never seems to understand that is just how sensible their fathers and mothers were.

AND there are still some foolish people with long hair. How sad!

IT'LL soon be time to think up a set of New Year resolutions that we can break.

Ten Years Ago in Prince Rupert

December 4, 1915.

A word picture of how Prince Rupert had suffered under Tory mismanagement and another of what it would have been like under Sir Wilfrid Laurier was painted in stirring addresses at Liberal headquarters last night by Fred Stork and G. R. Naden. T. D. Pattullo presided and J. E. Myers of Terrace was also a speaker.

At the conclusion of the conference with the government fisheries advisory board and local fishermen last night, George Morrow delivered an able speech in which he pleaded for the rights of fishermen as against the monopoly of the cannerymen.

The Red Cross sale yesterday in the store of Miss Barbeau was a great success, $80.05 having been realized. Mrs. Olier Besner and Mrs. R. L. McIntosh were in charge.

When the little children come home

From one end of Canada to the other children come trudging home from school each day. Some come across wind-swept prairies—some through damp and blustery streets.

It is then they need real food.

Mothers—buy a bottle of Bovril to-day. When the children come home dissolve a spoonful in a cup of boiling water. See how they relish it. See how it helps their growth and adds to their strength. Bovril is a splendid drink for children—and puts beef into them.
