City Growth Means Growth Of Country.

The development of the interior agricultural districts, especially the prolific Skeena and Bulkley Valleys, will proceed just as Prince Rupert develops as a shipping port and centre of population. Once Prince Rupert starts moving in this direction there will be an impetus in the interior. Those people who are now established on farms there will increase the acreage under cultivation and new farms will be started. The great city of Vancouver caused this to happen in the Fraser Valley. Prince Rupert's growth will have a similar effect in the interior district contiguous to the city.

The farmers of the interior, especially those engaged in the growing of small fruits and vegetables and to a lesser extent those engaged in dairy and stock lines, have suffered in the past through the lack of an adequate market and many of them have hoed a hard row during the past few years. It seems that there must be a ready local market and Prince Rupert is looked upon as that market.

It is hoped that the elevator here will establish the port as a shipping centre. It will bring large vessels here. The presence of those vessels and their outfitting and loading will make business and work and that means that there will be room for more people here. This business and work may be developed to unlimited proportions as has been evidenced with the growth of seaports in the past.

The grain growing lands back of the city should benefit through having an elevator to which to ship their grain and the farmers engaged in production of stock, dairy products, fruit, vegetables, etc., should benefit through the presence of more people in Prince Rupert to buy and consume what they have to offer.

Getting A Kick Out Of Life.

It is the age of thrills. Whatever may be the cause, and many explanations are made for it, it is apparent that on all hands people are calling for more excitement. This desire expresses itself in many different ways — some methods to get it being quite legal and proper, others being quite the reverse.

Road Amundsen and his associates look on the task of flying to the North Pole and back again and they nearly lost their lives trying to do it. Scientific investigation was the reason given for embarking on the journey but, no doubt, the party expected to get a "kick" out of it and they did. The same might be said of the successful Mount Logan expedition and numerous other ventures. Even the Prince of Wales is getting some thrills out of his trip to Africa and the Prince is known to dearly love excitement with a touch of danger to it.

The Leopold-Loeb affair was a case of where excitement was sought in a different direction. The case now before the public eye from the eastern states where a young man could not get enough excitement out of bootlegging so deliberately murdered a taxi driver is another instance.

To do something that has not been done before and that is fraught with a certain amount of personal danger gives thrills and excitement. People in their quest for this, however, should not make other people suffer. They should have regard for the physical and mental warfare of their fellowmen and should not force their excitement on others not desiring it.

30c for paint—
70c for labor putting it on

That's how it averages up on most jobs. Two-and-one-half times as much for the labor as for the paint. So why risk your entire investment by yielding to the temptation to save a few cents per gallon on the paint you buy?

Good paint is always the cheapest.

Use Valdura Asphalt Paint and you will be certain of a satisfactory job.

Valdura Asphalt Paint

is better than most mineral paints because it is made of one of the rarest minerals known — genuine 99.5% pure Gilsonite natural asphalt — this makes it an absolutely waterproof preservative paint which possesses great durability. Valdura is also highly acid and alkali resisting. Can be used anywhere, indoors or outdoors, underground or above ground, and will always give perfect protection.

Valdura is made in glossy Black and rich, deep shades of Red, Brown and Green. It is put up in convenient sized containers from 1/2-gallon up; is all ready for use and can be applied by anyone. First cost is low and, based upon cost-per-year-of-service, it is cheaper than any other paint made.

NEW RUSSIA

Inmates Treated Less Harshly Than in Earlier Days of Soviet Regime

MURDER LIGHT OFFENSE
Death Sentence Chiefly to Those Who Take Part in Counter-Revolution

MOSCOW, July 15. — Prison life in Russia has greatly improved since the grim days of the Bolshevik revolution. A much more humane regime has replaced the terroristic methods which accompanied the change from a monarchical to a democratic regime. From the hardened murderer down to the inoffensive looking youth accused of theft, prisoners eat, sleep, mingle together and share the same daily conditions of prison life. Criticism is chiefly directed at the slender quantity of food and lack of outdoor exercise.

Only in the cases of the most dangerous criminal prisoners are found such things as stone cells, iron bars and solitary confinement. All others, even political prisoners, are given large, well-lighted, tidy rooms with iron cots, and a single blanket for a covering. In most cases these rooms are not even barred, and the inmates are free to mingle among themselves. Very little work is provided, and the prisoners, therefore, are free to indulge their hobbies, to smoke, play cards, read and have the freest use of musical instruments (their own) and other forms of entertainment.

Relative Offenses

Murder in Russia is relatively a mild offense as compared to counter-revolution. The correspondent on a recent visit to one of the Moscow prisons spoke to a youth guilty of triple murder, who was serving only three years, while in the next room was a man accused of counter-revolutionary activities, who was condemned to death. Ten years is the maximum for murder in the first degree, but death invariably is meted out to those found guilty of working against the present political regime. The Bolsheviks say this severity is necessary in order to insure the success of revolution.

In another prison the correspondent talked with a priest, still wearing his clerical garb, who, according to his own story, was sentenced to three years for having censured from the pulpit across the corridor from him was a physician, of refined features and keen intelligence, who was imprisoned for a similar term because he refused to join the medical corps of the Red Army. In another room was a delicate-looking soft-spoken student, who was given three years for attempting to cross the frontier without a passport.

Watchful Eye

Counter-revolution is regarded the most grievous offense of which one can be convicted in Soviet Russia. The State Political Police, "Cheka," now called the "G.P.U.," keeps a watchful eye on those belonging to the old imperialistic regime, making scores of arrests every week on even the slightest suspicion. Most of the arrested persons are sent to the famous Buterka Prison, on the outskirts of Moscow, which has become known as the "Aristocrats' Prison," from the number of princes, princesses, barons, baronesses, counts and countesses interned there.
