Aviation Pioneer "Fled to North," Air Plans Failed

PEACE RIVER, Alta. (CP) — A man who once was one of the pioneers of aviation on the North American continent and who later fled in discouragement to the "wilds of northern Canada," is dead.

He was Dr. William Greene who died recently at 81 after practising dentistry in this town, 250 miles northwest of Edmonton.

Born in San Francisco, he attended the University of California but he was more interested in aviation than dentistry.

After graduating, Dr. Greene opened an office in New York city but spent much of his time building balloons, and later flying machines.

WITH WRIGHT BROTHERS

In the early part of the century he established himself with the Wright Brothers and Glenn Curtiss as a big name in the aviation industry.

But Dr. Greene was the least successful in obtaining financial backing. He established his first airplane factory at Rochester, N.Y.

Dr. Greene made his first airplane flight "somewhere around 1907." He never was sure of the exact date, but he was sure that he had never seen anyone else fly before he did it himself.

Seeing his rivals forging ahead, Dr. Greene became discouraged. He had spent his own fortune as well as the money of his friends. His once-flourishing dental practice had dissolved through lack of attention.

ARDUOUS TRIP

Deciding to move to the "wilds of northern Canada," he arrived in Edmonton in the winter of 1911-12. He took a train to Peace River, bought an ox team and travelled to Hudson Hope, B.C., trekking 300 miles over unbroken country with the temperature sometimes dipping to 72 degrees below zero.

Telling no one he was a flier or a dentist, he remained there until four years later when he received word that war had broken out. He enlisted in the Royal Air Force but was rejected because of his age.

Dr. Greene offered his services to Washington and was made receiving and testing officer at Kelly Field, then the largest in the United States.

After the war, he returned to the Peace River country and resumed the practice of dentistry.

BLACKWOOD on Bridge

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Mr. Muzzy Makes A Very Brilliant Play

Miss Brash put out two free bids on her two kings in today's deal but even so she would have made her bid if it hadn't been for an amazingly good play by Mr. Muzzy.

Not that Mr. Muzzy thought up this play by himself. On several previous hands Mr. Champion had kidded him about sticking so religiously to the old "rule" of playing third hand high. "You'll never get anywhere following that motheaten old idea," he had said. "There are plenty of situations where the only right play in third position is a low card."

Mr. Muzzy would rather have died than admit the truth of this at the time. Secretly, however, he had planned to test Mr. Champion's "new" theory. He got his opportunity in this hand.

Mrs. Keen led the ace of hearts and shifted to the jack of clubs.. Without hesitation, Mr. Muzzy played the 10!

This was the only play to defeat the contract. With a sure loser in both hearts and diamond, Miss Brash could not afford to lose two clubs. The only place to get rid of clubs losers was on dummy's diamond suit. And to set up diamonds, the enemy had to be conceded a diamond trick.

Miss Brash won the second trick with the king of clubs, took three rounds of trumps and then played the ace, king and another diamond. Mrs. Keen won the third diamond and returned a club, Mr. Muzzy cashing two tricks in that suit to defeat the contract.

Note that if Mr. Muzzy had won the first club trick with the ace and returned the suit, that would have stripped his partner's hand of clubs. When she got in on the diamond, she would have had to return a heart which would have given Miss Brash a sluff and a ruff—and her contract.

"Why do they play that way against me — and never when they're playing with me," groaned Mr. Champion.

"If you don't want me to know these good plays, why tell me about them?" grinned Mr. Muzzy.
