NEW METHOD HUNTING BEAR

Lasso and Axe Used at Queen Charlottes in Capturing Big Brown One

Hunting bear with a rifle or even a shot gun is not an unusual sport. It lay for Rufus Watts, however, to invent a new method of toying with bruin in his own haunts. It was in Massett Inlet last Tuesday that the exhibition was given. A bear was seen swimming in the inlet. Watts, who was fishing, approached from the water and lassoed him with a rope he had in the boat. Bruin set out for shore towing the boat and net and it became evident to the captor that unless more strenuous efforts were used the big brown fellow would escape. Just as Bruin struggled out of the water on to the beach, Mr. Watts brought an axe down on his head and bowled him over.
