WOLF TOTEM POLE AT PRINCE RUPERT

This totem pole, which now stands at Prince Rupert, B.C., for-merly belonged to a Nishga Chief, named Dauk, and stood in the front of his lodge, at Gitlakdamix, on the Upper Nass River, in Northern British Columbia.

The carved figures seen on the top of the pole represent the principal actors in legends describing the origin of the family crests. The owner of the totem pole belonged to the "Wolf Clan."

The principal legend which explains how the wolf was adopted for the family crest is as follows: One day, long years ago, a great lava eruption took place, at Gitwunsilkqu, on the Upper Naas River. The molten mass pushed the waters of the river back across the valley to the mountain-side and formed a great lava plain, which extended from the head waters of the Kshluich to the canyon, at Gwinaha. The fiery flow overwhelmed villages and fishing hamlets in its path, and the people fled to the surrounding hills. Among these fugitives was an Indian chief named Gum-lugidis, the ancestor of the owner of the pole. Gum-lu-gidis fled, with his family, to the highlands of the Shkamal River where they camped. Night after night they had no rest, but were disturbed by weird sounds and voices accompanied by the beating of tomtoms. At length the Chief and some of his braves determined to set out and discover where the sounds came from. The legend describes how they found themselves in the abode of "Luluks". Spirits of the Dead, where they beheld many strange things. Escaping from these haunted regions, Gum-lu-gidis, overcome by fear, again took up his flight, this time across the Grease Trail to the Skeena River, leaving the Naas, with its terrors, far behind. When the winter snows had melted and the ice had left the river, Gum-lu-gidis and his companions travelled down the Skeena River, in dugouts made from cottonwood trees, until they reached the island of Khern, now known as Kaien Island, on which Prince Rupert is situated. Not very long after they had settled at Khern, Gum-lu-gidis' rest was once more disturbed, this time by the nightly howls of wolves which seemed to be calling Gumlu-gidis by his name. The old fear overcame him once more, for he thought the spirits of the lava had again found him out. After the howling had continued for two nights, the old Chief determined to meet his fate. Dressed in his ceremonial dancing robes, with face painted and his long hair tied in a knot, after the manner of the warriors of his tribe, he set out alone from the camp armed with his Chief's tomahawk, set with abalone shell. Following the direction from which the sounds proceeded. Gum-lu-gidis came face to face with a large white wolf. Raising his tomahawk prepared to defend himself he noticed the animal was in great pain and unaware of his approach, as it was trying in vain to dislodge a sharp piece of deer's bone which had pierced its jaw. Gun-lugidis said to the wolf "Brother, do me no harm and I will remove the bone which otherwise will cause your death." After Gum-lu-gidis had removed the bone, the wolf became very friendly, and each time the Chief went out hunting, the white wolf killed a deer for him; thus supplying him and his family with food. So, the legend states, Gum-lu-gidis adopted the white wolf for his "Ayouks" (crest) and in his ceremonial dances always wore a white wolf skin robe. After some years of peace, Gum-lu-gidis became homesick, and he returned to the Naas, for he longed to fish once more in the waters of the Kshliich, where the "hanginwezuch" (white AVALON, Santa Catalina Islands, California, December 20 .-Half starved and able to speak only in whispers, John Kelly, seventyfive year old fisherman, from a hospital here on Sunday described his rescue after having drifted at sea for ten days in a twenty-two foot sailing craft. His companion, James McKinley, aged 63, died from exhaustion on the eighth day out after having twice tried to end his life by jumping overboard, both times being pulled out of the water by his shipmate.

The two men were swept out to sea in the tiny craft when the storm on the night of December 7 blew* heir mainsail away. They had set out he day before from Redondo with pro-visions to last them only twenty-four KIFUKUMARU hours. For two days after McKinley's leath. Kelly lay in the forward end of he boat afraid to look at the body of his dead companion while the vessel irifted. Finally the drifting craft was ghted by a taxi-boat, the batter vesel taking Kelly aboard. As the rescuing boat was nearing port, however, the sail boat broke loose and drifted out to sea with its dead cargo. Search is now being made for the derelict.
