RAILWAYMEN AT ANNUAL BALL

Big Event Proved One of Most Attractive of Season With Large Crowd Present

The annual Canadian National Railway ball held in the Auditorium last night proved to be one of the most attractive events of the season. It was gay with color, enlivened with excellent music, and the crowd of five hundred that attended was in happy mood, intent on enjoying the occasion to the full. If at times the dancers were crowded a little closely, no one minded it but became enthused rather than otherwise by the presence of so many on the floor at one time.

Lionel Holfby was in his usual excellent form as master of ceremonies and he handled the locomotive bell with great skill and precision. His crowning work was the guiding of hundreds of dancers through the intricacies of a circle onestep.

The Boys' Band played selections while the dancers were gathering and also played the music for the grand march which was led by Superintendent W. H. Tobey and Mrs. R. B. McNaughton, the dance orchestra taking up the strain of the waltz at the critical point. The seven piece orchestra in charge of Bandmaster Wilson played well and lost no time between dances.

The mural decorations, which were unique, were executed by J. Edwards, one of the company's painters and decorators, whose realistic subjects were admired by everyone.

Supper was a great problem, six sittings being required to make everyone happy. During that time extras in plenty were played so that the program was continuous from the opening just after nine o'clock until the closing at three. Committees in charge were:

Hall, decorations and orchestra—Messrs. Annesly, Campbell, Derry, Heffernan, Teng and Wilson.

Invitations — Messrs. Walter Smith, Forest and Parry; Mesdames Rogers and Frew and Misses Carrall, Graham, Harvey, Johnston, Macdonald, Taylor and Tremayne.

Refreshments—Mr. and Mrs. Simpson, Messrs. Parry and Rogers and a number of others.

Door — Walter Smith and Harry Thrupp.

LIQUOR TEST CASE SO FAR IN FAVOR OF EXPORT WAREHOUSE FURTHER ARGUMENT ON MONDAY.

as a warning as to what might happen if the liquor he was purchasing was consumed within the province. There were no other new features in Mr. Pyle's evidence.

Claims it Legal

Mr. Gonzales, in argument, referred to many decisions in other Canadian courts as to methods of legal export. His main contention was that it was legal, as had been done in this case, to take orders for export, receive payment and make delivery within the province. He made several citations along this line. There was nothing in the British Columbia Act, he contended, to specify how export liquor should be shipped. There was no law to say that Ness could not be his own carrier and, that being the case, it made no difference where the liquor was delivered to him—even if it was right in the accused's own warehouse. If the particular sale in point was made believing it to be bona fide for export, then it was legal and the charge should be dismissed.

Was it Export

Mr. Patmore announced that his whole argument would be that it had not been a bona fide sale for export. If it was, then any man, even living in Prince Rupert, could order a bottle and say that he wanted it delivered to an American boat and there go and consume it. He pointed out that the destination recorded on the invoice was the Kanaga and not Seattle or Ketchikan. Therefore, it was not an export. He charged that such sales were being made for consumption in British Columbia aboard the boats and that the Consolidated did not care whether the liquor was consumed in the province or not. It was fair to presume that such small shipments were not intended for export. He claimed that even by delivering liquor to the wharf, the defendant had not complied with its duty to see that it was a bona fide export shipment. The fact of the matter was that the accused probably did hink that as long as it delivered the liquor to the boats that it was complying with the regulations. He asked that the case be adjourned so that he might be given the opportunity to answer Mr. Gonzales' citations. It was not his desire to press for a conviction that he knew could not stand. In such a case, he did not wish to put either the crown or the defence to the expense that would be involved in an appeal.

Is Boat Foreign Territory?

The magistrate asked the opinion of counsel as to whether or not a boat of United States registry constituted United States territory. Neither apparently were very sure, Mr. Gonzales' opinion being that it did while Mr. Patmore's was that it did not.

Mr. Gonzales pressed for a decision as to good faith and Mr. Patmore concurred with the request. The magistrate gave the point in favor of the defendant. The evidence of the detectives that they had seen the shipment leave port indicaid good faith, he decided. Possibilities as to what might happen the liquor after it left could not be accepted by the court for there was no evidence that it had not gone to the United States.

The case was then adjourned until Monday afternoon for further argument and a final decision.
