$300 FINE IN LIQUOR CASE

SAMUEL DE STEFANO CONVICTED OF SELLING AT PORT CLEMENTS CLUB

No evidence being put in by the defence, conviction and fine of $300, with the option of three months' imprisonment, was imposed by Magistrate Me Clymont in the city police court this Stefano, charged with selling intoxicating liquor. Notice of appeal was given by S. W. Taylor, counsel for the defence. E. F. Jones, city solicitor, prosecuted. The only witnesses in the case were two Liquor Board officers, Constable William Gibson and Constable Thomas Sheeves.

Constable Gibson stated that on September 18 at 1:45 in the morning he and Constable Thomas Sneeves and another man went into the Port Cle- miscs about twenty minutes. CHICAGO'S RUM SHOT TO PIECES

SEVENTY-FIVE DEATHS TOOK PLACE THERE WITHIN PAST TWO YEARS AND FEW ARE LEFT

CHICAGO, Oct. 2.—The death roll of Chicago's Rum Row, which has reached 75 in the last two years of gang warfare. is almost complete, in the opinion of veteran police observers, and the principal bands of beer runners and alcohol dealers are about "shot to pieces."

The leaders and many of the followers of these gangs have been the object of elaborate funerals, or are in the hands of police and federal authorities. The coroner's statistics show that many more have been eliminated by bullets than by law, but eventually most of those still alive have been arrested, and another "wild west" epic, as lurid as any of the

BEGINNING OF "WAR"

A police legend now accepted as fact traces the beginning of the gang war to the death, in November, 1924, of Mike Merlo, acknowledged leader of the west side Italians. He is said to have forbidden hostilities against rivals in the business of manufacturing and dispensing illicit liquor. While he lived, occasional liquor robberies known as "hijacking." were the only outbursts. Merlo died of pneumonia, not bullets.

The day after his funeral. Dion O'-Banion, head of a composite group. chiefly with Irish surnames, was shot down and the war was on. Sometimes the police were able to encounter an auto load of gangsters and a few of them NOW RECOVERING met death in conflict with the law. But nearly always competitors got to them first with little or no traces of the as-

REVENGE IN DEATH

Of Merlo's lieutenants were the six Genna Brothers, three of whom were quickly slain in revenge for the O'Banion shooting. Many of other gangs were "taken for a ride," shot and thrown from an automobile along suburban

An assistant state's attorney, James McSwigin, happened to get in the way of a gangster's machine gun, and was killed with two others. One of them. the man really sought, was a boyhood friend of McSwigin.

The death roll grew until 54 names were added in the first eight months 1926 and then the leaders of the Saltis-McErlane group, about the last of the list, were taken on murder charges

Harry Breen is now at his duties down town again after having been laid up at home for the past two or three weeks with rheumatism.
