MISS L. TITE WINS HONORS

Local Young Lady Student of St. Joseph's Academy is Associate of Toronto Conservatory

Word reached the city yesterday of the high honors won by Miss Lorna Tite, daughter of Mr and Mrs. George Tite of Prince Rupert.

Out of the number of students competing, Miss Tite stood fifth and carried off the much coveted degree of Associateship of Toronto Conservatory of Music. This carries with it, for her, honors in pianoforte playing, harmony, history and counterpoint in the teachers course.

Miss Tite is the first pupil from St. Joseph's Academy to win teachers' certificate. She was one of the first pupils for music with Sister Ledwina, where she continued her music studies up to about a year ago. In her last year at the local academy she covered two year's work with honors, making herself eligible to compete for the degree of A.T.C.W.

Her success is a matter of congratulation for her parents and will be hailed with joy by her many admiring friends in Prince Rupert.

Nothing astonishes men so much as common sense and plain dealing.—Emerson.

SIR GUY GAUNT ON SINGAPORE

Thinks Establishment of Base no Menace to Other Nations But Coaling Station

HAS SCHOONER YACHT

Will Cruise up Coast Soon in British Columbia Waters

VICTORIA, March 3. — No menace to other nations is implied by the Singapore naval base project, in the opinion of Rear-Admiral Sir Guy Gaunt, K.C.M.G., C.B., C.M.G., M.P., who is now engaged in supervising of his four-masted schooner yacht, the Four Winds, at Esquimalt, preparatory to cruising the waters of the British Columbia coast and, subsequently, the world's seven seas.

Other nations need not interpret the establishment of a base at Singapore for the British Navy as a gesture of belligerence, according to Sir Guy, who observed that Hong Kong is situated at the very threshold of China and is about 1,500 miles closer to Japan.

Singapore, he pointed out to The Colonist, is the gateway to the markets of the East, markets whose richness, in the opinion of many experts, is fast shifting the centre of the world's trade from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Should there "be trouble" in, say, the China Sea, the nearest adequate base for the British Navy would be Malta, many long days' steaming away from the scene of the warfare.

Base a Necessity

On the voyage from Malta to the China Sea, a fleet would find an intermediate fueling and outfitting base an absolute necessity. Once arrived in the Far East and operating under conditions of warfare there, the fleet similarly would need a strongly fortified base for refitting and fueling. Singapore, Sir Guy says, is the logical place for such a base, and without it, the Empire's eastern trade routes can never be adequately protected.

Sir Guy touched briefly on the advertising value to the Empire of a naval base at Singapore, and indicated the extent to which it would enhance British prestige in Asia. It would be "a great shop window" in the market of the East, he said.

Leader in Fight

As a Conservative member of the House of Commons for the Buckrose Division of Yorkshire, Sir Guy has been one of the leaders in the fight for an appropriation to establish the Singapore base. His eminence as a naval officer, and his wide experience in the waters of the East constitute him an authority on this question.

Because of the distance at which it would have to operate from its base, an Asiatic fleet would find the utmost difficulty in attacking the North American Pacific littoral, Sir Guy thinks. Aircraft and aircraft carriers would not, at their present stage of development, render such an an offensive against this coast appreciably easier.

Value of Aircraft

The distinguished admiral does not, however, minimize the importance of aircraft in the general scheme of war. The time is not far distant, he says, when the admiral of the fleet and the commander of the army will both take to the air to direct the operations of their commands.

But talk of the aeroplane having supplanted the battleship, or the soldier, is just so much "tripe" at this stage of the game, he says.

And here, again, Sir Guy is well qualified to speak. His opinion is not that of one who has never flown. When aeroplanes were first developed to a point where their military possibilities became apparent, he made frequent flights. Not because he liked flying, he explains, but because it was his business to know aeroplanes and the uses to which they could be put in war.

After his retirement from the navy, Sir Guy plunged into politics with the same energy and determination that marked his career as a sailor. He was elected in 1922 and has represented his constituency ever since. Last year his health gave way under the burden of his duties and he was ordered by physicians to seek complete surcease from his work.

Boat Overhauling

His travels, since have brought him to Victoria. Last September he bought the Four Winds in Seattle, just after the schooner had completed a voyage to the South Seas. He promptly brought the vessel to Yarrows, at Esquimalt, and has been occupied with the business of outfitting her ever since.

The ship would soon be ready to put to sea, Sir Guy said yesterday. He did not propose to embark on a long voyage for a while. He would be here for some weeks yet, he said. After he had cruised about in British Columbia waters to his heart's content, he would set sail for other regions—the South Seas, perhaps; England, perhaps; he could not really say.

The Consolette Model

. . . smallest and the least expensive of the famous Orthophonic Victor line of musical instruments built on a revolutionary new principle.

THE CONSOLETTE Model of the new Orthophonic Victor may aptly be called "the little brother of the Credenza",—the sensational musical invention which became famous in a day.

This smaller model is our answer to the call for a compact, moderate-priced instrument containing in essence the principles which make listening to Orthophonic Victor music so fascinating.

The "Consolette" is endowed with the spirit of that new and true quality of music reproduction which the "Credenza", the first and finest of the Orthophonic Victors, gave to the world on Victor Day. A remarkable value.

The price of the Consolette is only $115.00 at any "His Master's Voice" Dealer. The Granada, a larger model, may be owned for $200. The Credenza, $385.00.

These three instruments will be scarce for some time to come, yet you can hear your Dealer's demonstration model today,—and place your order for early delivery.

MEIGHEN HAS FIRM HOLD ON LEADERSHIP

(Edmonton Journal)

The Conservative whip has issued an emphatic denial of the stories that have been afloat that members of that party in the house of commons have been plotting to bring about the removal of Mr. Meighen from the leadership. The proceedings of the sessions have certainly given no indication of such a desire on the part of his parliamentary followers. Mr. Bennett, who has been mentioned as a possible successor, declared some days ago that there was no warrant for the use of his name in this connection and that there was complete loyalty to Mr. Meighen. That the latter is not persona grata to elements among the party supporters outside parliament has long been known but there was never much chance that they would be able to displace him and according to all signs it is steadily growing less.
