REVOLUTIONARIES OXFORD UNIVERSITY

Indian Undergraduates and Others Engaged in Secret Propaganda, Says London Times

Certain underground activities have been traced at Oxford which were designed to promote the formation of a revolutionary group among Indian undergraduates, says the London Times. In particular, two non-Indians have been engaged in secret propaganda among them, and they seem to have made some impression on certain members of the Majlis (Indian society). Getting in touch with selected men, they enjoined strict secrecy, and it was arranged that Indian members of the organization should be shown under assumed non-Indian names.

The work of these agents also included a study of the antecedents of each Indian undergraduate likely to become a convert and his views as to Indian politics, together with plans for their education in Communist doctrine by means of literature imported from abroad and very quietly distributed.

VESUVIUS SHOWS SIGNS OF ACTIVITY
