GREAT BRITAIN
AND PREMIER KING.

Some newspapers in this country, and a few politicians as well, are attempting to persuade the Canadian people to believe that the contributions which Mr. Mackenzie King and his colleagues made to the discussions of the Imperial Conference were of little or no importance. Old Country newspapers have different views on the subject. Here is a fair sample of the tributes which the press of Great Britain has been paying to the Canadian Prime Minister and to Canada in general.

"Mr. Mackenzie King's services at the Conference itself, as well as his public appearances in London and elsewhere, have fully justified the short postponement of the Conference that was made in order to secure his presence, and also the arrangements made by both parties in Canada to make his attendance possible. Those most closely in touch with the Conference proceedings are best able to testify to what he has done at Downing Street. Throughout the sittings he has taken a leading part in the deliberations, and his influence has been largely instrumental in bringing them to so satisfactory a conclusion. In his various public appearance in London and the Provinces, too, Mr. Mackenzie King has worthily upheld the dignity of the Dominion, and given a new prominence to Canada and Canadian affairs which should in due course bear good fruit."

Congratulatory comments also have appeared in connection with the address on the problems of Canada which Mr. Mackenzie King broadcast from the London station of the British Broadcasting Company just before he left England. Whatever some of his critics may say, therefore, the point to be remembered is that the Prime Minister went to Britain with an object in view and attained it—and did other good work for this country besides.

WHY ARGUE OVER
SUCH THINGS?

To the New York World belongs the original credit for pointing out the foolishness of continually discussing the comparative size of the Majestic and the Leviathan. The rival owners—Great Britain and the United States respectively—have found out the question as to which is the larger vessel several times since they were allocated war prizes. To the eye of the uninitiated they look alike. They are both monsters, reported to be much too costly to operate, and considered glaring examples of what not to build in future. But, as The New York World pointed out a year ago, why on earth advertise a couple of German-built boats when the firm which built them in Hamburg cannot be charged commercial rates for the publicity? The point obviously is well taken.—Victoria Times.

PEACE RIVER SHOULD GET ITS RAILROAD.

Premier Brownlee is said to have indicated that the only railway construction to be undertaken by the province this year will be in the Peace River district, and that there nothing more ambitious is intended than two extensions of a few miles each. If this is correct it will be admitted generally that what building is to be done is planned for the right part of the province; the part, that is, where railway extension is most urgently required. But it is to be hoped that the program will be made more in keeping with the requirements there.

The Peace River district had, this year, perhaps a better crop, certainly as good a crop, as any district in the province. But the net value of it to the growers is heavily discounted by the long railway haul to market, while in respect to a very considerable proportion of the crop it is costing more to get the grain to the railway than to get it from the shipping station to Vancouver or Prince Rupert. Settlers in the Pouce Coupe country have to spend three days taking a load of grain to the nearest railway point, and there are said to be several hundred thousand bushels in that area to be marketed.

Farming under such conditions cannot be other than a heart-breaking enterprise, and the courage and persistence which the pioneers are showing in carrying on, and in steadily increasing their acreage, deserves the success that can only come to them with proper railway facilities. If the Government, the Dominion authorities and the people of Central and Northern Alberta are justified in the faith they hold as to the productivity of the Peace River country it would be good business, as well as a measure of well-earned relief, to undertake something more than a trifling extension of the railway system by which that country is so inadequately served.—Edmonton Bulletin.

Tribute Paid to Canadian
Premier as an Outstanding

(By F. A. MACKENZIE, in "Overseas")

The Empire Conference began in fears, but ended in triumph. There was much anxiety in London beforehand. Rumor said that three of the Dominions were working, not for unity and co-operation, but for disintegration. South Africa's representative, rumor whispered, would threaten to "cut the painter." Mackenzie King, Canada's new Premier, had been reluctant to come and was not likely to prove sympathetic when he arrived. Ireland, with the memory of old grievances still green, would throw her weight against Imperial unity. And even those least inclined to pessimism wondered what would happen.

We can say that most of our worst fears were unfounded. The leaders of the British Commonwealth settled down to a frank and businesslike discussion of Empire problems. Soon after his arrival Canada's Premier won the hearts even of the doubters. People realized that he was not a separatist, but was working for unity between the English-speaking peoples on both sides of the Atlantic. General Hertzog, at the beginning, frankly stated the position of his government in South Africa, but he was the first to disavow any intention to take South Africa outside the Empire, even if he could. Ireland's representatives scoffed with good-natured railing, at the idea that they harbor hostility to us. They admitted in the early days that they were not very much interested in matters outside their own country, saying that they had enough to do there to keep them busy. But during the conference the hearts of the Irish leaders warmed to us.

The spokesmen of Australia, New Zealand, and Newfoundland showed themselves to be champions of the unity and closer co-operation of the English-speaking peoples. Not least interesting was the attitude of India's representative. Many of the British audiences he addressed must have been surprised, not only at the excellence of his English, but at the soundness of his gospel of the Commonwealth. India seeks her full share of the inheritance of freedom and justice which our peoples have secured, and her spokesman worthily and fittingly proclaimed her hopes and ideals at every opportunity.

MACKENZIE KING

The arrival of William Lyon Mackenzie King, Prime Minister of the Dominion of Canada, was awaited with special interest. Mr. Mackenzie King has long been one of the romantic figures of the Empire. He has an historical ancestry, being in the line of Mackenzie, the famous Canadian rebel. He started life as a serious student of world affairs. He won his master's degree at the University of Toronto. From there he went to the University of Chicago, living at Hull House. Miss Jane Addams' famous social settlement, and studying the problems of the poor. Then came Harvard, which gave him a scholarship that enabled him to go abroad and study economics in the old countries of Europe. In London he lived at the Passmore Edwards Settlement in Bloomsbury.

Then, fully trained, he went back to Canada, an eager young social reformer, fitting himself into his life-chosen work of reconciling Labor and Capital.

Already he was attracting attention from people who are always on the lookout for outstanding characters. Mrs. Humphry Ward made him the hero of one of her novels. His friends echoed his praises through two continents. He was the coming man in Canadian Liberalism. In 1909 he became Minister of Labor. In 1911, swept down in the vortex with his party, he found himself retired to private life.

It was then that he did a characteristic and bold thing. John Rockefeller, jun., inheritor of all the burdens of his father's wealth, seeking a way out of some of the industrial troubles in his great mining interests in Colorado, called on Mackenzie King to help him. The politician must have known that to have his name associated with that of the Rockefellers would not do him good from the electoral point of view. He risked that, went to Colorado with young Rockefeller, and rew up a scheme, which both sides accepted, ending one of the fiercest industrial conflicts of modern times.

In the autumn of 1921 I obtained admission into Soviet Russia. The Communist authorities in Moscow were examining me. "You are a Canadian?" one of them asked. I nodded assent. "There is another man called Mackenzie in Canada, a politician." "You mean Mackenzie King?" I suggested. "Yes, that is the one. He was associated with the Rockefellers, wasn't he?" I explained what the connection meant. "What is he doing now?" "If you wait a few weeks," I replied, "you will see that he is Prime Minister of Canada." It was a safe prophecy. It came true in December of that year.

Much water has flowed under the bridge since then. The Mackenzie King who came to London in October, 1926, had somewhat outgrown the romantic stage of his youth. He has become broader and heavier. Responsibility, maybe, weighed him down a bit. But his frankness, his sincerity and his shrewd wit won him friends wherever he spoke. It was interesting to see the way in which he absorbed and radiated the atmosphere of comradeship which surrounded him.

The first time that I heard Stanley Melbourne Bruce, Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia, I felt in my heart "Here indeed is a man." An Australian by birth, alumnus of Cambridge University, a barrister of the Middle Temple, a soldier twice wounded and decorated for valour in the Great War, forty-two years old, with the verve and vigor of twenty-eight, intense, practical, idealistic, Mr. Bruce
