INDIANS MAKE RAIN MEDICINE

Contest to be Held to Decide Which Tribe Can Get Best Results

SHERIDAN, Wyo., May 6. — Medicine men of six Indian tribes of Montana, South Dakota and Wyoming will weave their charms and sound their chants trying to convince the "God of Thunder" to loose rain from the clouds in a feature event of the semi-centennial celebration of Custer's Last Stand to be held in June at the battlefield site of the Little Big Horn River.

They will expect to see who can make the "best medicine" on the last day of the celebration. The medicine men, each representing a tribe—the Cheyenne, Crow, Blackfoot, Assinibone, Flathead and Sioux—will be more than three score and ten years. The chief medicine man of an Indian tribe must be one of the oldest members of the tribe.

Limbs Painted

Their bodies covered with white clay, and faces and limbs painted with red, orange and yellow hues in weird designs, each Indian will carry a staff, tipped with brilliantly-colored feathers. With a whistle in his mouth he will ride through the Indian camp on the battlefield, blowing the whistle and chanting weird phrases.

Bear Tail's Success

In Bear Tail, oldest medicine man of their tribe, the Montana rows of the Pryor reservation have a participant who is expected to "mix heap big medicine." Five years ago, Bear Tail warned the tribe that it would rain on a certain day when a rodeo was to be held.

Not a cloud obscured the sky so the youths prepared for the rain.

CARRIED WIFE'S BODY 200 MILES OVERLAND WITH HIS DOG TEAM

NOME, May 6. — Duncan I. McDonald, Candle creek mining man and pioneer of Alaska, arrived at Nome recently with the body of his wife after covering 200 miles overland by dog team in order to have the remains embalmed for shipment to Hillsdale, Mich., the home of her relatives.

The journey was made in six days over mountain passes and obliterated trails. McDonald slept out in the open and kept the body frozen.

The woman died from premature child birth in a district where there are no doctors or hospitals. She was Miss Frances Bishop, school teacher and graduate and was born in North Dakota.

The funeral was held under the auspices of the Rebekah lodge, of which she was past grand noble.

She was postmistress at Candle for two years. Her husband was among the advance guard of the Dawson stampede, and was born in Glengary, Ontario. His relatives live in Montreal. He has been associated with mining for twenty-five years.

CONFESSION BILL INNES

Sensational Story of How Former Prince Rupert Man Died in Wilds of Far North

SHOT BOTH TRAPPERS

Confession of Crime Made During Period of Remorse and Death Followed Quickly

The story of the double murder of two trappers in the far north and of the death of William Innes, a former resident of Prince Rupert who was here in the early days, is told in a special despatch to the Edmonton Journal from Peace River as follows: Shocking and sensational is the story reaching here today of the death by his own hand of William Innes, well and favorably known wherever he was located as "Old Bill Innes," in the lonely seclusion of his trapping cabin in a region known as "Deserters Cabin" on the Finday River west of Hudson Hope.

Surrounded by a big catch of fur and plenty of money, Old Bill was found by Ole Johnson, a fur buyer, a few days ago with a gaping hole in his chest made from a 30-40 rifle.

Torture of Remorse

While suffering the torture of remorse, he unfolded a story that seems beyond credence to old timers, knowing Bill Innes in his years of wandering throughout the mountainous country to the west which he had traversed in his search for fur, and his discovery of the iron and copper deposits that were revealed to the public some few years ago when a small stampede was staged for the staking of the copper deposits.

It was on this stampede the bodies of two stakers were found by J. H. Johnson, a legal engineer, who was on his way to the copper regions. Both bodies were lying a short distance apart, and it was supposed a duel to the death was staged, both falling victims to the other's shots.

Bill Innes' Story

This is the story that was told to the astonished Shorty Webber, a short time before the body of Innes was discovered.

Bill Innes was trapping about sixty miles away from the cabin of two men by the name of Holtmeyer and Christiansen, both trappers. He came down to the cabin on a visit and early on the morning of January 4, 1920, he shot down Christiansen, a short piece away from the cabin and then went in where Holtmeyer was cooking the hot cakes for breakfast. He picked up Holtmeyer's own rifle and pumped 14 shots into his body. He then took the body of Christiansen and buried it in the pit of an old root cellar and after robbing the bodies of some seven hundred dollars returned to his own trap line, leaving the body of Holtmeyer where it had fallen.

Never Suspected

No one ever suspected he had ever left his own line or visited the dead men who were his friends. A heavy fall of snow obliterated all tracks and upon the police of Hudson Hope hearing of the finding of the body of Holtmeyer, they proceeded to investigate. The general opinion up to the present time was that Christiansen had done away with his partner, taking the seven hundred dollars they were known to have possessed and disappeared.

Incidentally, it was Shorty Webber in the dark of night on his way to Hudson Hope some ten days later who dropped in to visit Holtmeyer and stumbled over his dead body and who upon his arrival at Hudson Hope found that the news of the killing had preceded him by the Finlay Fork mail carrier just a few hours before.

Events leading up to the suicide, indicate that Bill Innes had on several occasions recently been found in a state of tears and almost collapse by different trappers, who had occasion to visit or pass his cabin.

Confession is Made. It was to Shorty Webber, friend of Holtmeyer and Christiansen, that the solving of the seven-year-old murders was revealed in a tragic manner. Visiting Innes and renewing acquaintance, Innes was showing him through a pile of snapshots when he uncovered one showing Christiansen and he immediately commenced to groan and pace the floor, continuing to do so for some time, when he finally collapsed and proceeded to narrate the above story of the killing of Webber's friends.

Webber, terrified, rushed away to the camp of Frey and Gregory, where after some hesitation he unfolded the horrible disclosures. Frey, in company with Webber and another trapper, returned to the Innes' cabin but were ordered away and the story was retold to Ole Johnson, who with an Indian, ostensibly to purchase fur, went to the cabin only to find the door barricaded.

Suicide's Body Seen. Peering through the window, Johnson saw the lifeless body of Innes lying on the floor and the door was thereupon broken down. Finding life extinct Johnson proceeded to Hudson Hope and reported.

A hasty examination by Johnson revealed the desperate efforts Innes had taken to make sure he would not be foiled of his intentions. In the event of the rifle not completing the work it was intended to, he had carefully set a large butcher knife within easy reach, but this was not required, the rifle having been well placed to do its part.

Horrible Chapter. He was about 55 or 60 years

ALASKA NOT PLEASED WITH HEARST ARTICLE Anchorage Newspaper Says Conditions in Alaska in Wildest Days Not Equal to Chicago (Anchorage Times) That article appearing in the Chicago and other publications of William Randolph Hearst in which conditions in Alaska are described as being very lawless, would be amusing to Alaskans were it not for the bad impression such an article may create among its readers in the States. Of all the newspapers in the country, a Chicago publication should be the last to criticize vice conditions in any other section, and of all publishers, Mr. Hearst should be the last to permit his writers to indulge in that sort of fiction. If it is the desire of Mr. Hearst really to devote his columns to the work of improving conditions such as he informs his readers exist in Alaska, there is a more fertile field outside the boundaries of Alaska than inside; it would not be necessary, as a matter of fact, to go beyond the limits of the city of Chicago itself to find conditions a thousand times worse than those existing in Alaska in its wildest days; and there are many large and small cities close to Chicago where the need of reform is so apparent one wonders how it has escaped the notice of the Hearst publications.
