BLACKWOOD on Bridge

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

If Often Pays To Lead All Trumps, Meek Learns

Have you ever noticed how the Mr. Meek in your game hates to lead out his last trump when there is still a finesse to take? He has a horror of losing complete control of the hand and suffering the humiliation of having an entire suit run against him.

Actually, there are many contracts which can be made by cashing all of the trumps—and with an absolute minimum of danger. I am not referring to the cashing of all trumps for the purpose of executing a squeeze or with the hope that an opponent will make a wrong discard. The situation I mean is the one illustrated in today's deal—the cashing of all of declarer's trumps simply for the purpose of getting an exact count on the defenders' hands.

The ace and king of spades won the first two tricks as Mr. Meek muttered something about Miss Brash's optimistic bidding. A third spade was ruffed by Mrs. Keen and Mr. Meek overruled.

A trump lead followed and Mr. Abel took the ace and returned a trump, dummy's queen winning. Another trump lead to the king took Mr. Abel's last one. Mrs. Keen discarded two small clubs on the last two trump leads.

At this point Mr. Meek had one trump left and he held on to it grimly. He tried to break the diamond suit but on the third round Mr. Abel showed out, discarding a spade. Now the king of clubs was cashed and a low club led toward the ace-jack. Mrs. Keen played the six on the king, then followed with the eight.
