TO WHITEHORSE AS SEEN BY THE SHIP'S BARBER

Victoria Man, Formerly in Prince Rupert, Tells of Recent Visit to Yukon Territory

(By Alderman J. A. Shanks, formerly Ship's Barber, ss. Princess Louise)

The best traditions of the Golden North are still strictly adhered to in Dawson City. Even from the beginning and it is so today "two-bits" is the smallest coin permitted to circulate in the far flung Yukon metropolis.

Coming back from Skagway a tourist told men how his money had been refused in Dawson City. He desired to purchase a "two-bit" cigar and offered in payment two dimes and a nickle, the cigarman politely refused. "We don't understand that kind of money out here," he said as he pushed the three coins back, "and we don't want to get it in use." Therefore the tourist had to break into a ten dollar bill to pay for his smoke. "Two-bits" or higher goes, but small change is kept severely out of circulation. The newspaper costs a quarter, likewise a bottle of "pop." Children born in Dawson City don't know, until they "come out," that a coin of less value is used anywhere.

At Whitehorse

As my personal observations did not extend beyond Whitehorse, I shall begin my narrative at that famous point where the trail of '98 became merged with the roaring waters of the swift flowing Yukon.

Old-timers in Whitehorse tell, and willingly so, of incidents that happened when the great rush was on. Everything from planks and soap boxes to sturdy built stern wheelers were used to convey the excited, impatient gold hunters down the river to Dawson. The Yukon is a veritable torrent. It rages and roars on its way propelled by a terrific current, while jutting rocks and dangerous rapids call for pilotage of an extremely skillful character. Anything less than a staunch ship has little chance in this glacier-fed stream, and thousands lost their lives in trying to make the grade during the wild days of '98, when ignorance and greed overthrew commonsense. But that is the price gold demands even in other walks of life and in more cultured places than the Klondyke. Nor did the strongest always survive, sometimes I was told, the least likely looking got through; luck was a great factor. It is estimated, I believe, that more money went into the Klondyke than ever came out, and it is likely so.

Boats Now Shorn of Glory

Many river boats of ancient vintage grace the banks of the Yukon at Whitehorse. Ships that were floating palaces in their day, now discarded for more up-to-date crafts. I noticed the Bonanza King, The Yukoner and The Sourdough all stern-wheelers with stirring histories of riches, revelry and robbery. Shorn of all their glory they are now but monuments of a glittering, hectic episode in the world's past. Parked today on the sides of the turbulant stream they once majestically rode, they are the prey of tourists and sightseers who give them the "once over" from wheel house to galley and rip souvenirs from their time-worn and neglected frames. And local publicity throws an atmosphere about these old river boats that is interesting in the extreme, if not entirely authentic. Tales of fortunes in gold dust changing hands between Dawson and Whitehorse through the medium of poker games, while the good ship Sourdough laboriously made its way against the terrific current, is common gossip. "Dangerous Dan McGraw" and "the lady that's known as Lou," immortalized by Robert Service, were apparently frequently passengers on the staunch craft Bonanza King, while hair-raising shooting affairs which helped pass the time on the tedious voyage, was without doubt what built up the immense popularity of the ss. Yukoner.

Whitehorse seems fairly prosperous with its 500 or so inhabitants. Hope rings strong in the minds of its people, and some day they predict another rush, another stampede, for they claim the Yukon has richer fields left than have yet been prospected. Incidentally, gasoline is six bits a gallon and autos are quite plentiful considering the limited roads that Whitehorse can boast of.

Scenery Is Stupendous

We now board the White Pass and Yukon Railway train for Skagway. This road is narrow gauge, 108 miles long; two years were spent in its construction and the fare is ten cents a mile. The scenery along this little ralroad is, to say the least of it, marvellous. Stupendous, perhaps, is a more suitable word. Extreme heights and hair-raising depths are continuously in view. Chasms, roaring rivers, wonderful waterfalls, glaciers and cloud-piercing snow-capped mountains prevail. From Lake Bennett to Skagway, about halfway, the scenic surprises are just one after another. Constantly the train is twisted into a horseshoe where the engineer could nearly shake hands with the passengers on the rear coach and on one section three engines are used where the grade is particularly severe. About midway on the route Lake Linderman can be seen in the distance. The head waters of this lake was the terminus of the Chilkoot Trail, made famous in the Klondyke stampede before the White Pass Trail was used. Nearby is the townsite of Bennett, which, in the early days, had a population of 10,000 people. It was here the stampeders built their rafts and crude boats in which to continue their journey. Bennett is now practically confined to one business, employing fifteen or twenty people—a railway eating-house, and a mighty good one. Here meat of the moose, caribou, mountain sheep and delicious wild berries are served to the great delight of the tourist.

The International Boundary line at a point twenty miles from Skagway and at an elevation of nearly 3,000 feet, soon looms into view. The Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes are planted securely about fifty feet apart. Between them is a granite column which bears on one side the word "Canada" and on the other side "United States." It is an imposing sight when the tourists gather round and many of them have their cameras busy picturing each other with their feet spread so that they stand in both countries at the same time.

Dead Horse Gulch comes next, spanned by a cantilever bridge 215 feet high, which, according to a booklet issued by the railroad, is the most northerly bridge of its kind and height in the world.

The remnants of White Pass City are visible a few miles closer to Skagway. It is stated that White Pass City had a population of 30,000 at one period of the Klondyke stampede. It is located at the foot of the White Pass where began the famous trail of '98. Nothing now remains but a few dilapidated shacks—not a soul for miles.

We look out of the coach window and we see Dead Horse Gulch, named so because of the thousands of pack horses that died on the trail. Nearby is the remains of White Pass City, once thrilling, animated, feverishly alive, now dead. Yes, more forgotten and ignored than even Dead Horse Gulch.

However we speed on. Over dizzy heights and roaring canyons, more corkscrew bends and mountain edges, until at last the brakesman sings out, in a resounding, unmistakable Northern voice, the rather pleasant and welcome name, "Skagway." Good! We are glad we're here. The trip we have enjoyed immensely but our nerves are on edge. We have had enough, for one time, of these hair-breadth altitudes, these visions of bygone glory, this glittering gold of the past. Skagway means change, a good meal and a chance to step out for awhile.

The train does not enter the town through any rear gateway, but cuts a clear line down the centre of Skagway's main street. Business and traffic appears undisturbed as we go clanging along to the depot located at the other end of the town.

CHURCH BOYS DEFEAT NAVY

Y-Macs Scored 4 to 1 Last Night in Intermediate Soccer

Although both teams lacked regular players, the Naval Reserve and Y-Macs staged a merry battle in the Intermediate football league last evening, the latter winning 4 to 1.

The Navy, kicking up hill in the first half, after a few exchanges, took the lead when Camm notched the side's only counter. Strachan evened up for the Y-Macs just before half time.

On even terms, both sides worked hard for the first part of the second half until Bond's shot was deflected into the Navy's net. The Navy thereupon wilted while the Y-Macs invreased the vigor of their attack. Strachan put the cherry shirts three up and, shortly before time, Dickens made it four.

J. Campbell handled the whistle and Spiro Gurvich and Eddie Smith acted as linesmen.

The standing of the teams in the Intermediate League is as follows:

	W.	D.	L.	Pts.
Y-Macs	2	1	0	5
Naval Reserve	1	0	2	2
High School	0	1	1	1

John Dybhavn came in on last night's train from his summer home at Lake Kathlyn. Mrs. Dybhavn and family will be returning to the city next week.

SPORT CHAT

With another baseball series between Ketchikan and Prince Rupert on tapis for Fair Week it is confidently hoped that the local players will be in shape to give the visitors from the north some better competition than they did in the Dominion Day games. Ketchikan, it may be admitted, has some exceptionally good baseball talent this year and in July sent a team down here that might go a long way in a bigger place than Prince Rupert. The locals were clearly outclassed at that time but now, with the league season behind them and a little practice between now and September, they should be able to make a good battle of it with the northerners on the occasion of their forthcoming visit.

Orders for 130,000 tickets for the Dempsey-Tunney heavyweight championship bout September 23, have been placed with the printers, according to Philadelphia despatches. In the meantime, other arrangements for the fight in the new Philadelphia stadium on the grounds of the exposition, are being completed. Although Dempsey is understood to have decided on finishing his training at Atlantic City, exposition officials are hoping they can persuade him to establish his camp in Philadelphia. Tunney's new camp has not yet been announced and the officials also hope to have Tunney complete his preliminary work there. The advance sale of tickets is said to have already passed the $200,000 mark.

KETCHIKAN WINNERS BASEBALL SERIES FOR CHAMP. S. E. ALASKA

KETCHIKAN, Aug. 26. — For the second day in succession, Ketchikan Monday evening turned back the invaders from Juneau, winning the second game of the series 6 to 4 and clinching the Southeastern Alaska baseball title for the 1926 season. Bob Davis, speed ball merchant of the local aggregation, starred both on the mound and with the willow, striking out 13 batters and getting two hits in three times up.

Manning, who opposed Davis, pitched a fine game and with a little better support might have copped. As it was he gave Ketchikan fans several bad moments.

Win In Fourth

The locals put the game on ice in the last of the fourth frame after it seemed to be irretrievably lost. And Davis who got into trouble through his own wildness in the first of the fourth, delivered the blow that gave the cash customers a thrill and turned the Juneau rooting delegation into a band of mourners.
