MOOSE KILLED IN NUMBERS

BLOOD SUCKING TICKS THOUGHT RESPONSIBLE FOR NUMEROUS FATALITIES

EDMONTON, Nov. 30.—Attacked by some strange and unknown species of bloodsucking ticks, large numbers of moose were killed off by these pests in the foothills forest reserves during the present year, according to a forest ranger who whose work gives him excellent opportunities for observing the wild game in the woods.

For three months the ranger was continually on the trail this summer. During the trip he covered hundreds of miles of little known wilderness, often penetrating into places where even Indians did not know much about the country through which he travelled.

"The moose are not as plentiful this year as they have been in former years," he stated, "a certain kind of bloodsucking tick having taken a fearful toll of the animals."

While on the trail, we found dozens of carcasses simply covered with these loathsome parasites, and they had sucked the last drop of blood from the animals' bodies.

Not only do these pests attack all species of animals but they are also responsible for sickness among the backwoods people. Cases are on record of prospectors, trappers, rangers and travellers, who have been attacked by these parasites who have fastened to the bodies of their victims while they were sleeping on the ground or in cabins.

The bloodsucking operation, according to this ranger is painless and the person attacked may not know he has been infected until stricken with fever and weakness. Big red blotches remain on the bodies of the sufferers for several days after infection, hence the name "spotted" or "tick fever."

The larvae, when hatched by the female, crawl up the stalks of plants and stems of bushes and seize on the first animal that passes by. They then hang on to their victims until they are gorged with blood. They then release their hold and repeat this operation when the blood supply has been absorbed.

RAW FUR SEASON STARTING TOMORROW AND MONEY NEEDED TO FINANCE PURCHASE OF HIDES—GREAT VALUES OFFERED

In view of the opening of the raw fur season tomorrow, December 1 and the consequent heavy payments to make from time to time as the furs come in, the B.C. Fur Company is compelled to turn its large stock of fur coats into cash at the earliest possible moment.

There are a hundred and twenty fur coats, in seal, muskrat, squirrel, etc., to be disposed of and the marked down sale prices run from $40 to $50. TO BRING COSSACKS INTO CANADA IS MISSION OF VISITOR

WINNIPEG, Nov. 30.—Joseph Okulitch, advance agent of 50,000 farmer cossacks, who desire to settle on the prairies of the Canadian West, has been in conference in Winnipeg with officials of the railway companies, and land settlement agencies to ascertain the feasibility of bringing over his charges at an early date.

Fifty per cent of the Cossacks, Mr. Okulitch says, have sufficient funds and equipment to undertake active farming immediately. The remainder are farm laborers. Mr. Okulitch, who was born in Siberia, was assistant minister of food supplies in the Imperial government.

There are 1,500 Cossacks, ready to come to Canada next March, provided existing difficulties against their entry into the Dominion are removed in time. Mr. Okulitch, presented a request to the authorities in Ottawa for assistance in settling 480 families under the auspices of the Russian Agricultural Colonies Society, who are not of Cossack origin. All these people, it was pointed out, are anti-Bolshevists.

Mr. Okulitch will inspect land throughout the prairie provinces and decide upon the location for the first group.

FOG HORNS INTERFERE WITH SUPPLY OF MILK

ST. CATHERINE'S POINT, Isle of Wight, Nov. 30.—The farmers are finding that the new fog horn erected here is interfering with the milk supply of the island. Whenever the horn sends forth its loud blasts, intended as a warning to seafarers, the cows scamper across the fields, frightened at the noise, and at milking time are not so prolific as when they have browsed all day without being excited.

Officials aver that more foghorns of the diaphone type are to be installed to warn ships passing in the fog, notwithstanding the dairyman's fear of milkless days when the winter fogs settle down in earnest.
