FORMAL OPENING OF THE EXPERIMENTAL STATION WAS IMPRESSIVE AFFAIR

benefit to the station but to the whole coast.

Mr. Cowie remarked the pleasure it was for him to be present for such an auspicious occasion and, stating that he came not especially for the opening of the station but had other business as well, and had planned his trip to be here at the time, spoke as follows:

OPENING OF THE STATION

"Marine Biological work began in a systematic way in 1898 when a station for that purpose was founded on the Atlantic Coast. In 1908 another station was opened at Nanaimo on the Pacific coast. Both stations were at first administered by a Board of Management under the department of Marine and Fisheries. In 1912 however, the Biological Board of Canada was created by Act of Parliament and given charge of the Biological stations and control of the investigations carried on therein.

The work of those two stations cover investigations of the life, history, growth and food of fishes, as well as biochemical, bacteriological and hydrographic researches.

The men who carried on those researches at the two original stations are voluntary workers from various universities, who are paid simply their travelling and living expenses.

Up to the year 1923, the Board was made up of two members appointed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and one member appointed by such Universities as are engaged in biological research and all of whom were scientific men.

In that year with a view to bringing the Board into closer touch with the practical problems of the fishing industry, the Act was amended to admit of the appointment of men engaged in the industry to the Board. Consequently the Board is now composed partly of scientists and and partly of what may be called practical men. Mr. Dybbavn as you know is the representative of the Pacific coast industry on the Board; a halibut fish merchant represents the Atlantic, while I represent the Department on its practical side.

"With this new organization there have been established two more stations at which it is intended to carry on researches on the preservation and curing of fish of various kinds, by salting, canning, smoking and freezing and generally to apply to the every day problems of those engaged in the industry the results of scientific researches.

"One of such stations is located at Halifax, N.S., and the other right here on the waterfront of your city and housed in the very handsome building in which we are now assembled. Its name is Pacific Coast Fisheries Experimental Station.

"As the representative of the department and as secretary of the Biological Board the pleasant duty, has fallen to me therefore of officially declaring the building open for work. I do this with the fervent hope that the industry will take advantage of it to the full by bringing to the qualified scientists at the station any and all of their problems that may be capable of solution through scientific means, and further, that the station may in years to come prove to be a real benefit not only to your local fishing industries but to those of the whole province as well."

Mr. Cowie to describe some of the details and the work that would be undertaken by the station and who Mr. Dybbavn said had come here most highly recommended, alluded to the fact that he was in the position, in which seemingly few people were, of loving his work which was a part and parcel of his being. Continuing his remarks, Mr. Finn stated that it would be the desire that only valuable work would be done by the Prince Rupert station. Nothing spectacular would be attempted and it was hoped that the station would be to the industry and public such as the British Food Board was—held in great esteem by the industry and men of science.

As for the immediate work to be done by the station Mr. Finn stated that there were so many problems that it would be possible to select only the most vital and, in making the selections, it was the intention to consult with the industry. Problems requiring attention were such as the freezing and yellowing of halibut fish, reduction in the making of fish oils and meal, both for food and fertilizer, by-products from offal, etc. In this connection Mr. Finn referred to dog fish oil which had been found to be almost as valuable, medicinally, as cod liver oil. If dog fish oil could be made an economic product, the value of the fish would be trebled for it was also useful in agriculture and in the making of leather, paints and varnishes.

Great strides in refrigeration were also looked for as a result of research work. If fish could be delivered in fresh condition it would aid a great deal in the matter of marketing products from new refrigeration methods.

The gathering then adjourned to the chemical laboratory where Mr. Finn demonstrated specimens of halibut from air and brine freezing, the latter of which were the much superior.

To conclude the proceedings, a toast was drunk to the success of the Prince Rupert fisheries experimental station.
