BLACKWOOD on Bridge

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Response to Opening Bid Is No 'Simple' Problem

Mrs. Keen gave me a bad time the other day. "Why," she asked, "don't you start a back to nature movement among bridge writers? You're all guilty of the same thing—spending too much time on intricate squeezes, coups, endplays, etc."

"For example," she continued, "the girls in my Tuesday afternoon club read your column and they can talk very convincingly about these deep plays that don't come up over once in a session. They look for a squeeze in every hand—and not one of them knows how to respond to an opening bid of one in a suit."

I pointed out that many readers liked intricate problem hands.

Mrs. Keen admitted this might be true but insisted that material on the simple, basic subject of responding to a one bid would be very useful.

I granted that the situation was grave and that I viewed it with alarm. I would not admit, however, that the subject she suggested was "simple."

Actually, I consider responses to opening bids of one in a suit as one of the most difficult branches of the game. Later bids by the responder can never correct a wrong impression given by an incorrect first response. And what good is it to be a fine dummy player if you are frequently in the wrong final contract?

Today's deal is one given by Mrs. Keen to illustrate her point. North's correct response to the opening club bid was one diamond—not one trump. Mrs. Keen would then have bid one spade, which North would be amply justified in raising to two. There would then have been an excellent chance to reach the sound final contract of four spades.

In the following columns I want to clear up some of the problems confronting the responder when his partner opens with one of a suit.

Food Costs Still Uppermost In Cost-of-Living Standard

OTTAWA (CP)—The largest portion of Canada's consumer dollar still goes for food. In fact, more money is being spent on food now than 10 years ago.

It's all part of the climb in living standards and prices. Bureau of Statistics officials explained as they unveiled the new consumer price index.

The index, based on 1949 prices equalling 100, replaces the old cost-of-living index. The old measuring rod, in operation for the last dozen years, is based on 1935-39 prices equalling 100 and now is considered outmoded.

Both, however, will be published monthly for the next half year before the old index disappears completely.

To show how accurate it can be, the new prices barometer did a complete turnaround on its predecessor and estimated higher living costs during August in contrast to a estimate of lower costs by the old index.

The C.P.I. climbed one-tenth of a point to 116.1 from 116.0. The old cost-of-living index dropped 1.1 points to 186.5 from 187.6. The new index reported higher food costs; the old one, lower costs.

The new index, two years in the making, places greater emphasis on food, again, in line with change in buying habits and living standards estimated in a national survey four years ago.

The C.P.I. estimates that 32 cents of the consumer dollars goes for food; 15 cents on shelter; 11 cents on clothes; 17 cents for household operations; and 25 cents for other family items, including such things as recreation, health care and purchase of liquor, tobacco and other sundries.

In contrast, the old index estimated 31 cents of the consumer dollar went for food, 19 cents for shelter, 12 cents for clothes, 15 cents for household operations, and 23 cents for other commodities.

The new index was unveiled by Herbert Marshall, Dominion Statistician, and L. E. Rowbottom, bureau prices chief, at a press conference in the parliamentary press gallery.

Officials pointed out that the new index covers only the urban dweller. Rural residents are covered in a separate farm index.

CANUCK SOLDIERS

the wounded, and, to drown out the noise of the operation, had artillery fire sent down.

Roy and St. Germain, the two most severely wounded, were on the enemy's side of the field, so Merrithew and his men went through a gap and worked in from the Chinese side.

DETECTOR USELESS

Pierce, unable to use a detector because the ground was littered with shell fragments, cleared through 10 yards of mines to reach Roy, still conscious though in pain, and weak. LeBlanc patched him up, administered morphine and then he and Dion carried him out. He died later in the regimental aid post.

Pierce then reached S. Germain who was dead. Now 20 yards inside the field, Pierce worked on to LeClerc and Pellierin, led them out and then returned to re-arm the mines and restore the field's effectiveness.

Within 1 1/4 hours of the first signal, Merrithew's group had removed the casualties and re-armed the field.
