THE MAN IN THE MOON says:

A VILLAGE is a place where weather is the chief topic of conversation.

WHAT I am wondering is how they got things done years ago before the idea of lunching together was thought of.

HOW much easier it would be for legislators if the people only knew what they wanted and how much better it would be for the people if the Legislators were not so keen on getting what they wanted.

A ROOSTER discovered an ostrich egg and rolling it into the hen house said, "Now, ladies, I do not want to embarrass you but here's a sample of what other folks are doing."

A LOT of people are like strychnine. They are all right if you know how to take them.

IN the old days girls played with dolls. Now they often play with fire.

BIRTH AND LIFE OF BRITISH GAZETTE PUBLISHED DURING GENERAL STRIKE IN BRITAIN.

the iron doors of the composing room were shut with a clang, and the work went on.

For measures had already been taken to meet the emergency which had arisen.

Welcome Help

The chancellor of the exchequer had rung up Lord Beaverbrook to ask what help he could give; and Lord Beaverbrook responded by lending for the service of the British Gazette the one man without whom it is not too much to say the situation could not have been saved. This was Sydney W. H. Long, the night superintendent of the Daily Express—a man of great experience and rare skill on the technical side of the printing. After working for years as a linotype operator, he had become master printer and then night superintendent of Lord Beaverbrook's paper. He was also a stout trade unionist, and had played a leading part in getting for the Compositors' Union their present charter. It was in his hands alone that the 'setting' of the British Gazette depended. But five columns of the 14 in the first number were set. The rest Mr. Long did with his own hands, except for the little brought in from the outside by the Stationery Office.

Of the readers, three remained staunch—R. Harris, the head reader, P. J. Greene, and F. Moody.

With Mr. Long, came Mr. Evans, head machine room overseer, and Mr. Trotter, chief mechanical engineer of the Daily Express. By the courtesy of the directors, Alfred Hawkins, chief stereotyper of the Daily Mail, was provided for the foundry a little later.

In the machine room, where the great presses operate, there was left of the Morning Post staff only Mr. Holmes, works manager, and Mr. Boyd, machine room overseer of the Morning Post, but they were reinforced by Mr. Thompson, chief engineer of the Morning Post, Mr. Norris, chief electrician, and Mr. Palmer, linotype mechanic.

But three or four men, however expert, cannot run two rotary presses. Crews for each machine are required, to handle the paper reels, to oil and tend the machinery, to clothe the cylinders with the stero-plates, and to take away printed papers as they pour from the flies.

A Memorable Scene

There was some voluteeer labor available, all of it inexpert, but it was thought better on this critical occasion to depend on members of the Morning Post household; and so the editorial staff, most of which was out of commission in dealing with so small a paper, clothed itself in dungarees, and marched down to the machine room, to be initiated into its job.

Such a sight was never seen before. Leader writers, art and music critics, reporters, sub-editors, financial experts—every able-bodied man, of whatever rank or station, was recruited for the occasion, and all responded to the call with "a frolic welcome."

The machines were late in starting. There was an accident in the foundry. A mould was broken; it took nearly two hours to clear away the splashed metal so that the autoplate would work again.

Night of Toil

It was nearly midnight when the last plate had been locked on the cylinder, and the signal to start was given. It was a night of "toil and ineffable weariness" for all engaged—a night full of anxieties and some disappointments, as might be expected with what was after all but a brilliant improvisation.

But the end was achieved. By six o'clock in the morning 230,000 copies of the first number of the British Gazette had been produced, and largely distributed.

The first supplies were sent to the aeroplane stations to be conveyed to the provinces, and the remainder of the edition was despatched by motor-van or car.

On Wednesday morning the British Gazette was a newspaper in being.

It was indeed the first step that cost. Every succeeding night the organization improved, the resources, except on the mechanical side, developed, and processes of production became more methodical and easily-working.

Many Inventions

On the first night it had been necessary to leave the two inside pages of the four-page sheet a blank. On the next night, Wednesday, all four were filled with news, and the amount of the issue was more than doubled. Indeed the total print increased rapidly in geometrical progression, until, at the end of a week, no fewer than two million copies of the British Gazette were being printed and distributed all over the country.

To produce this result a complete reorganization of the office had to be undertaken.

A new telephone system was installed as in the twinkling of an eye, and arrangements were made for feeding the multitudinous staff which rapidly grew up for transporting many workers to and from their homes, and for sleeping others on the premises.

The protection of the building also became a primary necessity. Its approaches were guarded by Metropolitan police and special constables, and admission to the building could only be obtained on official pass. The building was like a beleaguered fortress.

The work on the production of the paper began at 10 o'clock in the morning—only an hour or two after the printing of it had been suspended.

One Linotype Machine

Owing to the fact that there was only one man operating the linotype, a very early start was essential. Those of the editorial staff who were not employed on editing or sub-editing took turns as copy-holders in the reading-room, where the Chief Reader and two of his colleagues had stood by, or in the composing-room, pulling proofs, or driving cars, or even acting as messengers.

To understand the strain under which the British Gazette was produced in its early days, it is only necessary to realise that many of the key-men worked, sleeping in snatches, for 72 hours on end; and that a number of these never left the building at all. Without such devotion to their task the British Gazette would never have been possible.

Machine Scrapped

Now that the end of the strike has come, and the need for a Government news-sheet is over—now that the organisation so hurriedly improvised, is working at its highest efficiency—the elaborate machine, so painfully and laboriously constructed and adjusted, has to be scrapped.

That is the irony of the situation.

But the heroic task attempted has been achieved. The situation, desperate though it seemed, has been saved. The most formidable and incidious attempt that has yet been made to cripple the freedom of the Press and to withhold essential news from the public, has been frustrated.

The British Gazette may have had a short life; but it has fulfilled the purpose of living.

It becomes a memory; but it remains a monument.

THE music of great orchestras, of famous artists, of that almost endless and ever growing host of Victor entertainers keeps its true beauty when heard upon the Orthophonic Victrola.

A demonstration is a remarkable experience. So truthful is this performance that at first you will disbelieve your ears—until you have become accustomed to the miracle.

You hear the giant anger of the storming kettledrums, the amorous cooing of the clarinets, the soft and sunny laughter of the piccolo. You close your eyes and wonder where will wonders cease. Your first query will be, "How soon can I have one?"

Any "His Master's Voice" dealer will do his best to give you delivery as early as the present supply permits him.
